SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1949

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, facing decisions which make our wisdom or our folly affect the lives of untold millions, our need of the Divine leading is very deep. As we come to this quiet, noontide cloister of the eternal may we be strengthened for waiting tasks by the far look. Enable us to bear with fortitude the fret of care, the sting of criticism, the drudgery of unapplauded toil; to think clearly, to act kindly, to play manfully our part in the life of our times, to strike our blow for freedom and, keeping to the end of our brief day the unbroken vigil of the inner light, to leave the world better for our sojourn in it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, February 14, 1949, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Hawks, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 2313. An act to suspend certain import taxes on copper;

H. R. 2402. An act to extend the Office of War Assets Administrator and the War Assets Administration from February 28, 1949, until June 30, 1949;

H. R. 2632. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 84. Joint resolution to provide for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States, and for other purposes.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A memorial of the Legislature of the State of Maine; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in the ninty-fourth legislative session assembled, most respectfully present and petion your honorable body as follows:

"Whereas Josef Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary was sentenced to life imprisonment by the Government of Hungary; and

"Whereas we memorialists feel that such sentence threatens freedom of religion and speech: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, your memorialists, do hereby respectfully petition and urge the Members of Congress to take whatever action that can be taken to have the sentence imposed upon Josef Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary removed; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this memorial duly authenticated by the secretary of state, be immediately transmitted by the secretary of state, by air mail, to the proper officers and committees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, the President of the United States, and to each of the Representatives and Senators representing the State of Maine in the United States Congress."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"House Joint Memorial 3

"Memorializing the Congress of the United States to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to assist local lending agencies in financing disaster stricken livestock producers and feeders in the blizzard areas of the Western States

"Whereas unprecedented and widespread blizzards have recently wreaked disastrous losses on the livestock producers and feeders in the intermountain west to an extent and in an amount never before experienced; and

"Whereas the physical and financial losses suffered by such livestock operators in these storms of catastrophic proportions will seriously hamper, if not entirely preclude, the future operations on a practical basis of many livestock producers and feeders in this region, and will thus seriously affect the meat supply of this Nation for an indefinite period unless financial assistance is made available to them immediately; and

"Whereas the presently established banks and other livestock loaning agencies are fully staffed and prepared to service and pass upon the financial needs of these disaster-stricken livestock producers and feeders: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Thirty-seventh General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the senate concurring herein), That the Congress of the United States be and it is hereby urged to enact such legislation as it deems necessary to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make its facilities available to the local banks and other lending agencies by way of guaranteeing loans to livestock producers and feeders to the extent of 90 percent of any such loans and budget advances made to them, the local lending agencies in turn to carry 10 percent of such commitments, and otherwise to assist and facilitate the services of such agencies in meeting the local requirements occasioned by the widespread and disastrous losses in the blizzard areas of the Western States; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Colorado in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oregon; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Senate Joint Memorial No. 4

"To the Honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the Forty-fifth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in regular session assembled, respectfully represent as follows:

"Whereas Depoe Bay is located 100 miles south of the Columbia River on the Oregon coast; and

"Whereas there has been recommended the development of said Depoe Bay by the River and Harbor Act of 1945, in accordance with the United States Corps of Engineers' report contained in House Document No. 350, Seventy-seventh Congress; and

"Whereas the United States Corps of Engineers is prepared to start construction of this project immediately upon the appropriation of funds therefor; and

"Whereas the present conditions of said Depoe Bay result in lost time of commercial fishing boats, lost recreation facilities to vacationists and tourists, damage to boats in said bay at low tide and restricted use of said bay for rescue use by the United States Coast Guard motorboat stationed at Depoe Bay; and

"Whereas completion of this project will provide greater income to all commercial fishing boats, increased recreational facilities for tourist trade in the State of Oregon, elimination of damage to boats now using said Depoe Bay at low tide and the unrestricted use of this bay for rescue by the United States Coast Guard motorboat stationed at said bay; and

"Whereas the sum of $462,000 is necessary for the construction required on this project: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the house of representatives jointly concurring therein), That the Eighty-first Congress of the United States be and the same hereby is memorialized to further consider and make an appropriation in the amount of $462,000 available to the United States Corps of Engineers for the completion of the authorized Depoe Bay improvement project: Be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to each House of the Congress and to each Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Oregon and to each of the United States Senators from this State, and urge that they individually and collecively give wholehearted support to bring about this appropriation.

"Adopted by senate February 3, 1949.

"Concurred in by house February 8, 1949."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Enrolled Joint Memorial 3

"Joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to consider and pass legislation appropriating funds to complete construction of the Glendo Dam Project in Platte County, Wyo.

"Whereas the construction of the Glendo Dam project has been surveyed and all other preliminary work completed and suitable materials for the construction thereof are available adjacent to the project area; and

"Whereas the dam is to be constructed for the purposes of generating electricity, of which there is a shortage in the area, and also for the purpose of flood control; and

"Whereas the project when completed will have a capacity of 150,000 acre-feet of storage water for power-generating purposes; and will have a maximum capacity of 750,000 acre-feet for flood-control purposes; and

"Whereas construction of the project has been suspended for the reason that funds are unavailable: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of the Thirtieth Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and is hereby, memorialized to appropriate sufficient funds for the completion of the Glendo Dam project, and that copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives; to United States Senators Joseph C. O'Mahoney and Lester C. Hunt; Congressman Frank A. Barrett; J. A. Krug, Secretary of the Interior; and Michael W. Straus, Commissioner of Reclamation.

"Approved February 5, 1949.

"Governor."

A resolution of the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Connecticut; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Resolution memorializing the Eighty-first Congress of the United States of America regarding means of attaining a stronger and more effective world government through the United Nations

"Whereas the youths of the State of Connecticut now under the legal voting age have not had an opportunity by means of a referendum to express their views regarding a stronger and more effective world government through the United Nations; and

"Whereas these youths wish to express their support of a strong United Nations to prevent future world conflicts of major scale by the following means, to wit:

"SECTION 1. That the Security Council of the United Nations be given executive powers to quell disturbances of international peace;

"SEC. 2. That an international police force be established with powers to enforce decisions of the Security Council of the United Nations;

"SEC. 3. That the Security Council of the United Nations be given the right to inspect armament and munitions plants and the right to control the production of weapons of war and destruction within any and all national boundaries; and

"SEC. 4. That no member nation of the United Nations be allowed to resign from or secede from the United Nations: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Connecticut, That the Eighty-first Congress of the United States of America be memorialized regarding these means of obtaining a stronger world government through the United Nations.

"Resolved, That certified copies of the foregoing preamble and resolution be forwarded by the Governor of the State of Connecticut to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State of the United States, The President of the Senate of the United States, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma; to the Committee on Finance:

"House Concurrent Resolution 5

"Concurrent resolution memorializing and requesting the Congress of the United States to enact a bill to aid the State in the enforcement of the cigarette tax now evaded by use of the United States mails

"Whereas the State of Oklahoma has seen fit to impose a tax on the sale and use of cigarettes within its boundaries, and the revenues so obtained constitute an important portion of the funds available for its functions of government; and

"Whereas it has been brought to the attention of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Oklahoma that a large and growing system of evasion of such tax law has developed; that the United States mails are flooded with advertisements and inducements to the citizens of this State to violate the law of this State; that in numerous instances such advertisers entice prospective customers with statements to the effect that the use of the United States mails is sufficient proof of the legitimacy of such business and such a system; that the mails of the United States are constantly flooded with cigarettes in the process of delivery within this State, and on which cigarettes the tax required by the laws of this State have not and will not be paid; that this State is seriously disadvantaged by such use of the Postal Offices and mails of the United States for the purpose of evading the laws of Oklahoma; and that Oklahoma faces and is now suffering serious losses of revenue as a result of such system of evasion; and

"Whereas it has been brought to the attention of the House of Representatives and the Senate of Oklahoma that there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a proposed bill which would aid the States by requiring shippers of cigarettes in interstate commerce to furnish to the taxing authority of the State to which shipped a copy of the invoice on each shipment and the name and address of each person to whom shipped: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma (the senate concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be and the same is hereby memorialized and respectfully urged to enact a bill requiring shippers of cigarettes in interstate commerce to furnish to the taxing authority of the State to which shipped a copy of the invoice on each such shipment; or to enact such other bill to the aid of the several States affected as may be proper; be it further

"Resolved, That duly authenticated copies of this resolution be forwarded immediately to the Presiding Officers of the respective Houses of Congress.

"Adopted by the house of representatives the 10th day of January 1949.

"Adopted by the senate the 11th day of January 1949."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Indiana; to the Committee on Public Works:

"House Concurrent Resolution 3

"Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to enact effective legislation providing for flood control in the Wabash River watershed area and tributaries thereto

"Whereas each year the overflow of the many rivers, streams, creeks, and tributaries which empty into the Wabash River creates a flood condition imperiling life and causing property damage throughout the entire Wabash Valley, contributing at the same time to similar conditions which exist in the Southern States through which the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers flow; and

"Whereas the specific consequences of such flood conditions are: silting and sedimentation of stream channels, reservoirs, dams, ditches, and harbors; loss of soil and water; and increase in the speed and volume of rainfall run-off, causing severe and increasing floods, which bring suffering, disease, and death, impoverishment of families, damage to roads, highways, railways, buildings, and other property from floods; and losses in navigation, hydroelectric power, municipal water supply, and underground water reserve: Therefore, be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

"SECTION 1. The Eighty-sixth General Assembly of the State of Indiana does hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to enact effective legislation for the control of floods and the prevention of soil erosion, to preserve natural resources, prevent impairment of dams and reservoirs, assist in maintaining the navigability of rivers, protect and promote the health, safety, and general welfare of the people, and to appropriate sufficient funds for the execution of such legislation.

"SEC. 2. The principal clerk of this house is directed to forward copies of this resolution to the Secretary of the United States Senate, to the Clerk of the National House of Representatives, and to each United States Senator and Congressman from Indiana."

By Mr. YOUNG:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"House Concurrent Resolution C

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to increase the share of Federal participation and increase the annual appropriation under Public Law 725

"Whereas hospital construction costs have continued to rise to a point where it has become increasingly difficult for communities in North Dakota to finance hospital construction; and

"Whereas many of the communities in the areas of greatest need for hospital facilities find it impossible to meet the financial burden even with the present 33⅓ percent of Federal participation for approved projects under Public Law 725; and

"Whereas this condition tends to defeat one of the primary purposes of Public Law 725, which is to give special consideration to hospitals serving rural communities and areas with relatively small financial resources; and

"Whereas the Federal Government in several grant-in-aid programs pays 50 percent and in some cases 100 percent of the cost; and

"Whereas the increased share of Federal participation is necessary if hospital construction is to go forward in the areas of greatest relative need in North Dakota: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the Senate concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be and hereby is memorialized and petitioned to amend Public Law 725 by increasing the Federal share of participation in the construction of approved hospital projects from 33⅓ percent to 50 percent and to increase the annual appropriation under said law to meet the added cost of the revised share of Federal participation, and that the provisions be made retroactive so that hospital projects approved on the Federal construction schedules prior to the enactment of these amendments may benefit from the increased share of Federal participation; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to the Federal Security Administrator, to the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and to North Dakota's delegation in Congress."

(The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.)

By Mr. SALTONSTALL (for himself and Mr. LODGE):

Resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Resolutions memorializing the Congress of the United States to use all possible means to secure the release of Cardinal Mindszenty, of the Roman Catholic faith, and Bishop Ordass, of the Lutheran faith.

"Whereas the whole civilized world and all individuals who believe in God regardless of race, creed, or denomination, and that freedom of religion is necessary in this troubled world have been profoundly shocked by the arrest, imprisonment, and sentence of His Eminence Josef Cardinal Mindszenty, of the Roman Catholic faith, and the arrest and imprisonment of Bishop Lajos Ordass, of the Lutheran faith, by the Communist government of Hungary; and

"Whereas it appears that there is no justification for such arrest, imprisonment, and sentence but that it is actuated solely by the desire to destroy religious freedom and freedom of worship; and

"Whereas Hungary, recently styled 'a people's republic,' a satellite of Soviet Russia, has shown its utter disregard for freedom of religion in making the arrest and causing the imprisonment of these two men of God: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts desires to register an emphatic protest to the Government of Hungary in causing the arrest and imprisonment of these two churchmen; and be it further

"Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts urges the President of the United States and the Secretary of State and the Members of Congress from this Commonwealth to take appropriate action to convey to the Hungarian Government the demand of the people of this country that Cardinal Mindszenty and Bishop Ordass be immediately released; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted forthwith by the State secretary to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State of the United States, to the Presiding Officer of each branch of Congress, and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

"In senate, adopted, February 9, 1949.

"In house of representatives, adopted, in concurrence, February 9, 1949."

(The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions of the General Court of the State of Massachusetts, identical with the foregoing, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.)

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A resolution of the House of Delegates of Maryland; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Resolution protesting the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty

"Whereas the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary constitutes an attack by atheistic communism upon the freedom of religion; and

"Whereas prominent members of various religious groups in this country have characterized this unjust trial as a gross crime against freedom and as a rape of justice, these persons, including Archbishop Keough of Baltimore, Cardinal Spellman, archbishop of New York, the Reverend Daniel A. Poling, president of the World Christian Endeavor Union, and the Reverend Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, Chaplain of the Senate of the United States and pastor of Foundry Methodist Church in Washington, D. C.; and

"Whereas Cardinal Mindszenty was imprisoned in a Nazi concentration camp during World War II for his efforts in saving fifteen hundred Hungarian Jews from the clutches of the German Gestapo, thereby proving himself a defender of and a martyr for civil rights and humanity; and

"Whereas this trial is part of a world-wide conspiracy of atheistic communism to threaten not only the countries of eastern Europe but also the liberty, democracy, and very life of the United States; and

"Whereas representatives of the freedom-loving nations were barred from the courtroom during the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty; and

"Whereas Senator HERBERT R. O'CONOR has asked the intervention of the State Department of the United States in this matter, seeking to ascertain whether the Soviet and Hungarian Governments have violated the basic guaranties of the United Nations as to freedom of worship, fair and impartial trials, and freedom of speech: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Delegates of Maryland, That this body, representing a great State, in which toleration and freedom of religion not only are guaranteed by the Constitution but also are part of the very fabric of its citizens, solemnly protests the outrageous crime against religion and humanity now being perpetrated in the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty; and be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution be spread upon the journal of the house and that the chief clerk be, and he is hereby, instructed to send copies thereof to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State of the United States, and to each member of the Maryland delegation in the Congress of the United States.

"Read and adopted by the house of delegates, February 7, 1949."

A resolution of the House of Delegates of Maryland; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in Congress

"Whereas a resolution providing for the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski is now pending in the present session of the United States Congress; and

"Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

"Whereas the States of Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Nevada, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and other States of the Union, through legislative enactment, designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

"Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the heroic death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War; and

"Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated October 11, 1929, October 11, 1931, October 11, 1932, and October 11, 1946, to be General Pulaski's Memorial Day in the United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Delegates of Maryland, That we hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day Resolution now pending in the United States Congress; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be and he is hereby directed to send copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the United States Senators and Representatives from Maryland.

"Read and adopted by the house of delegates February 1, 1949."

PROTEST AGAINST FEDERALIZING NATIONAL GUARD—CONCURRENT RESOLUTION OF SOUTH DAKOTA LEGISLATURE

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of South Dakota urging Congress not to pass legislation which would federalize our State National Guard. I heartily concur in the resolution, and ask that it be appropriately referred and printed in the body of the RECORD.

The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Armed Services, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 5

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America not to enact legislation federalizing the National Guard of the several States of the Union

Whereas certain proposals and recommendations have been made that the National Guard of the several States be federalized; and

Whereas it is the considered judgment of the thirty-first session of the legislature of the State of South Dakota that to federalize the National Guard of the several States will not benefit the national defense program; that it will be detrimental to the effectiveness of such program in that it will destroy local initiative and relieve the States of their responsibility and duty to the Nation to maintain a military establishment available for national service in time of emergency: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the thirty-first session of the South Dakota Legislature, the House of Representatives concurring therein, do urge and recommend that the Congress of the United States refrain from adopting legislation federalizing the National Guard of the several States; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to His Excellency, the President of the United States, to the honorable the Secretary of War of the United States, to the chairmen of the Committees on Military Affairs of both Houses of Congress, to the Honorable CHAN GURNEY and Hon. KARL MUNDT, United States Senators from South Dakota, and to the Honorable FRANCIS CASE and the Honorable HAROLD O. LOVRE, Representatives in Congress from South Dakota, and to the Presiding Officers of both Houses of the Congress of the United States.

HOSPITAL BEDS FOR VETERANS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution adopted by the Council of Administration of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the Department of the State of South Carolina, relating to hospital beds for veterans.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas plans for 16,000 proposed Veterans' Administration hospital beds have been ordered by the President of the United States to be canceled; and

Whereas the greatest need of veterans of this great country is for prompt, proper, and adequate hospitalization of those suffering from physical and mental disabilities; and

Whereas it is a matter of common knowledge that all presently available hospital facilities of the Veterans' Administration are being utilized to capacity and there is a clearly demonstrated need for expansion of existing facilities; and

Whereas the President's order has necessitated plans in the Veterans' Administration to cancel plans for 24 proposed hospitals and reduce the size of 14 other hospitals; and

Whereas such curtailment of bed facilities is calculated to increase the suffering of veterans throughout this Nation by causing the Veterans' Administration to be unable to hospitalize many who may be in real and immediate need of hospital facilities; and

Whereas failure to hospitalize veterans promptly will ultimately result in aggravation of injuries and suffering which in turn will result in increased claims against the Government; and

Whereas the policy of present curtailment appears to be a penny-wise-pound-foolish action aimed at present savings which may mean several times the amount saved in future costs; and

Whereas the protection of sick and disabled veterans and their dependents is a primary responsibility of all able-bodied veterans, their organizations, and the people of the United States, and is the main reason for the existence of veterans' organizations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Council of Administration of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the Department of the State of South Carolina:

1. That this body do go on record as opposing, in principle, the said order of the President of the United States.

2. That the Members of Congress from South Carolina be forwarded copies of this resolution along with a list of all facilities affected by the Presidential order noted above with the request that they support legislation which may effectuate the completion of the Veterans' Administration hospitalization program as initially scheduled.

PROTEST AGAINST ARREST AND IMPRISONMENT OF RELIGIOUS LEADERS OF HUNGARY AND BULGARIA

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by members of the P. N. Lynch Assembly, No. 704, Knights of Columbus, of South Carolina, in regular meeting assembled, protesting against the arrest and imprisonment of outstanding religious leaders in portions of Hungary and Bulgaria, and so forth.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas we have learned from press and radio releases that certain countries allegedly democratically governed, but actually controlled and dominated by atheistic, communistic governments, have without cause, reason, or any sense of justice, arrested and imprisoned the outstanding religious leaders in portions of Hungary and Bulgaria and other Communist-dominated countries; and

Whereas the authorities conducting such arrests and trials have not permitted members of the free press of the United States and Great Britain to be present at any of the hearings or trial; and

Whereas the afore-mentioned religious leaders so falsely arrested, tried, and convicted because of their faith and belief in God and in true democratic government must of necessity oppose the atheistic, communistic element now in control of the governments of Hungary and Bulgaria: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the members of P. N. Lynch Assembly, No. 704, Knights of Columbus, in regular meeting assembled, do deplore the mock trial, treatment, and hardships inflicted on our brother Christians and Jews in the afore-mentioned countries; and further

Resolved, That we commend our President, our Secretary of State, and all civil and religious leaders who have unhesitatingly condemned the mockery of justice now prevailing in this section of eastern Europe; and finally

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be inscribed on the minute books of this assembly and that copies of the resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State, to the Honorable Burnet R. Maybank, to the Honorable L. Mendel Rivers, to the Honorable J. Strom Thurmond, and to the editors of the Charleston Evening Post and the News and Courier.

TRIAL OF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY—TELEGRAM FROM REV. LOUIS R. WILLIAMSON AND REV. ALLAN R. JEFFORDS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from Rev. Louis R. Williamson and Rev. Allan R. Jeffords, of St. Mary's Church, Hartsville, S. C., condemning the inhuman trial of Cardinal Mindszenty. I may add that I have already publicly condemned the treatment accorded Cardinal Mindszenty.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HARTSVILLE, S. C., February 16, 1949.

Hon. BURNET R. MAYBANK,
United States Senator from South Carolina, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Respectfully request you make strong public statement for record condemning inhuman trial of Cardinal Mindszenty and urge State Department to take effective diplomatic, economic, and United Nations steps toward bringing Hungarian atheist Reds to senses.

Rev. LOUIS R. WILLIAMSON,
Rev. ALLAN R. JEFFORDS,
St. Mary's Church.

MISSOURI VALLEY AUTHORITY—RESOLUTION OF GERING AND FORT LARAMIE IRRIGATION DISTRICT OF GERING, NEBR.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Gering and Fort Laramie irrigation district of Gering, Nebr., protesting against the enactment of Senate bill 555, to provide for a Missouri Valley Authority.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Works and ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Whereas in the Seventy-ninth Congress there was introduced a bill to provide for a Missouri Valley Authority, known as S. 555; and

Whereas in opposition to this bill we adopted a resolution on July 3, 1945, quoted as follows: "Resolved, That we are definitely opposed to a Missouri Valley Authority that would include in its scope the North Platte River and thereby radically alter our irrigation operations in any way, or that would subject our irrigation interests to wide governmental interference and restrictions under the guise of all-out social plans or programs"; and

Whereas our district authorized its president, Kent Lane, of Lyman, Nebr., to appear before the congressional committee of the Seventy-ninth Congress in opposition to the bill on behalf of our district and others representative of stability and welfare of the people of the North Platte Valley as a result of sentiment expressed at a mass meeting held in Scottsbluff, Nebr., on September 6, 1945; and

Whereas it is now reported that a new Missouri Valley Authority bill is being prepared for introduction into the Eighty-first Congress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the board of directors of the Gering and Fort Laramie irrigation district of Gering, Nebr., That we have not changed our position in this connection and that we reiterate our opposition to any bill of this nature which would place administration in the hands of strangers, deprive local interests of representation, and invade State's rights; and be it further

Resolved, That we favor the continued development of the Missouri Valley Basin under the Pick-Sloan plan, which is now going forward constructively in charge of the Army engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation, two well-established governmental agencies of long standing and high reputation.

BAN ON USE OF YELLOW COLORING IN OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, two of the many resolutions which I have received from dairy organizations in my State, urging the banning of yellow color of oleomargarine in order to prevent fraud in competition with butter.

One of these resolutions is from the Farmers Union in Barron County, in my State, a county in which I myself have owned and operated a farm since 1916.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas we, the members of the Barron County Farmers Educational Union, are concerned about the welfare of our members: Be it therefore

Resolved, That we, the Barron County Farmers Educational Union, gathered at our annual convention, this 11th day of December 1948, do hereby respectfully submit the following resolution that we back the program of the National Milk Producers Federation, in demanding a law to ban the use of yellow coloring in oleo or any other substitution by anyone; therefore be it

Resolved, That we send a copy to the Wisconsin Farmers Union State office and to all of our Representatives and United States Senators.

NORMAN FANKHAUSER,
County President.
ALICE LE JEUNE,
County Secretary.

FEBRUARY 5, 1949.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY:

The following resolution pertaining to the oleomargarine legislation was passed and signed by members of the Inter-Breed Association of Wisconsin, which represents all of our State's purebred dairy cattle breeders.

"We will support removal of Federal taxes on oleomargarine and the license fees and reporting requirements controlling manufacturers and distributors of the product, provided adequate legislation is enacted to ban the manufacture and sale in commerce of oleomargarine colored yellow in imitation or semblance of butter."

JOSEF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the city council of the city of Lynn, Mass., together with an editorial from the Daily Evening Item, of Lynn, Mass., relating to the trial and conviction of Cardinal Mindszenty.

There being no objection the resolution and editorial were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF LYNN, IN CITY COUNCIL,
February 8, 1949.

Ordered, That the city clerk, as clerk of the city council, be and hereby is requested to forward communications to our Senators and Representatives in Congress protesting and bitterly denouncing the travesty of justice enacted in the Communist-dominated courts of Hungary in the trial and conviction of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty; and be it further

Ordered, That the City Council of the City of Lynn, in the foregoing respect, endorses the editorial in the Daily Evening Item of this date entitled "Budapest's Real Defendant," and orders that a copy thereof be spread upon the records of the city council, and that the city clerk also forward to our Senators and Congressmen LANE and BATES, copies of this editorial.

[From the Lynn (Mass.) Daily Evening Item]

BUDAPEST'S REAL DEFENDANT

As the Cardinal Mindszenty case swiftly approaches its tragic and inexorable climax in Budapest, it is well to remember that the real defendant in the dock in this mock court is not a Prince of the Catholic Church, but organized religion, which the Communists hate with a vehemence surpassing all their other multitudinous hatreds.

Every Catholic, every Protestant, every Jew—all who profess a belief in God and His omnipotence—are Cardinal Mindszenty's codefendants. The Hungarian primate represents a philosophy which is anathema to every Communistic principle. The Kremlin's Hungarian puppets seek to stifle it by dragging its most distinguished exemplar in their country to the prisoner's bench like a common criminal.

This mock trial is strangely reminiscent of another held more than 2,000 years ago when Christ was haled before Pontius Pilate on similarly trumped-up charges. Then, as now, the official charge was treason, but the real indictment was that the Defendant dared to place God above the state. And the modern Pilate—Judge Vilmos Olthys—must at this moment be experiencing some of the uneasy qualms which Scripture tells us beset his notorious predecessor. Like Pilate's, his name will live in infamy, while that of the man he condemns will join the glorious company of religious martyrs.

During World War II, it was a common saying that the Nazis could be counted upon to commit some tremendous stupidity whenever the opportunity afforded. It is becoming increasingly apparent that the Communists are ruled by men of similar mentality because in centering their attack on this blameless Catholic prelate they have provided the spark needed to arouse world-wide organized opposition to their godless rule.

If Cardinal Mindszenty goes to the gallows, no worshiper of God anywhere in the world will be safe. The love of God and the right to worship Him freely are so deeply implanted in the human breast that men will fight to the death to preserve them. The sorry spectacle unfolded in Budapest will become an historic rallying cry that will eventually spell the doom of communism everywhere.

Let those here in America who have ridiculed repeated warnings of the dangers of communism come to their senses now that the Reds have reached the apex of their boldness. Let's have an end to queasy, half-hearted toleration of this serpent whose aim is to exclude Christ from men's lives. Let's have an end to the spineless appeasing and "negotiating" that have marked our official attitude since VJ-day. Communism is our hated and determined enemy and let's resolve from this moment forward to treat it as such. Let's repulse Stalin's "peace" feelers for the treacherous impostures they are. If there was one ounce of sincerity behind them, Stalin would immediately order a halt to the disgraceful proceedings at Budapest.

We are confronted at this moment in history with the greatest threat to human liberty the world has ever known. Let's recognize it for what it is and face up to it. The time for temporizing and half-measures has passed. This is Armageddon.

PREVENTION OF WAR

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution adopted by the people of Williamsburg, Mass., in town meeting assembled, on February 7, 1949, relating to the prevention of war.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas modern science has now produced means by which mankind can destroy itself; and

Whereas the United Nations was created as an instrument to preserve peace and its Charter is capable of amendment so as to make it effective for the maintenance of world order; and

Whereas disarmament and world peace can only be achieved by world order, world law, and some measure of world government; and

Whereas the people of Williamsburg have since April 24, 1771, been happy to delegate certain functions of government to their town government, other functions to their State government and still other functions to their National Government and are now willing to delegate further limited functions of government to a world government for the purpose of maintaining peace: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the people of Williamsburg, Mass., in town meeting assembled, That they call upon their Representatives in the Congress, in the executive department of the United States, and in the United Nations, to take note of these truths and forthwith to take such steps as may be necessary to have our delegates to the United Nations present or support amendment of the Charter for the purpose of making the United Nations into a world government capable of enacting, interpreting, and enforcing world law to prevent war; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to both Senators from Massachusetts, the Congressman from the First Congressional District, the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the United States representatives in the United Nations.

HOOF-AND-MOUTH-DISEASE PROGRAM IN MEXICO—INTERNATIONAL QUARANTINE STATION ON SWAN ISLAND

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD three resolutions adopted by the California State Board of Agriculture and senate joint resolutions 9 and 10 of the California Legislature relating to the hoof-and-mouth-disease program in Mexico, and the need for laboratories to study the disease, and also senate joint resolution 8 of the California Legislature relative to the proposed international animal quarantine station on Swan Island.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

To the Committee on Appropriations:

CALIFORNIA STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE,
Sacramento.

On January 17, 1949, the California State Board of Agriculture met in regular session at Sacramento, Calif., and had as its guests and participants in its deliberations, representatives of the California Farm Bureau Federation, California Cattlemen's Association, California Wool Growers Association, California Farmers, Inc., the Agricultural Council of California, and the Agricultural Department of the California State Chamber of Commerce. The following motion was unanimously adopted by the board with the concurrence of all those in attendance at the meeting:

"Whereas foot-and-mouth disease, a major and devastating disease of livestock, is present in the Republic of Mexico; and

"Whereas the Republic of Mexico and the United States of America have joined forces to control and eradicate the disease in Mexico; and

"Whereas the chief instrument for the control of the disease is the Joint Commission established for that purpose and supported by the two nations with financial, scientific, and general ways and means; and

"Whereas great strides are being made in the Republic of Mexico by the efforts of the Joint Commission toward the control and eradication of this disease, which is not known to exist elsewhere in North America; and

"Whereas it is in the general welfare of the two contracting nations to continue the work of the Joint Commission without any slackening of effort or loss of research, program, or planning: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we request the Congress of the United States to approve an appropriation of funds, and to approve such other enactments as are necessary, to continue without interruption the work of the Joint Commission for the eradication of foot-and-mouth disease in the Republic of Mexico, and that we commend the Commission for its excellent work at this time."

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Sacramento, ss:

I, Romain Young, assistant secretary of the California State Board of Agriculture, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of resolution passed on the 17th day of January 1949.

In witness whereof I hereto set my hand this 3d day of February 1949.

ROMAIN YOUNG.

Senate Joint Resolution 9

Joint resolution relative to funds for the Joint Commission for the Eradication of Foot-and-Mouth Disease in the Republic of Mexico

Whereas foot-and-mouth disease, a major and devastating disease of livestock, is present in the Republic of Mexico; and

Whereas the Republic of Mexico and the United States of America have joined forces to control and eradicate the disease in Mexico; and

Whereas the chief instrument for the control of the disease is the Joint Commission established for that purpose and supported by the the two nations with financial, scientific, and general ways and means; and

Whereas it is in the general welfare of the two contracting nations to continue the work of the Joint Commission without any slackening of effort or loss of research, program, or planning: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to approve an appropriation of funds, and such other enactments as are necessary, to continue without interruption the work of the Joint Commission for the Eradication of Foot-and-Mouth Disease in the Republic of Mexico, and commends the Commission for its excellent work; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to every Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States.

"Whereas funds have not as yet been appropriated for such laboratory; and

"Whereas a site for such laboratory has not as yet been selected: Be it

"Resolved, That we are in favor and respectfully urge that the Congress of the United States appropriate money for the immediate construction of such laboratory and that the site of the laboratory be determined considering not only the legal requirements as provided by congressional enactment, but also the economic situation as existing Nation-wide.

"It is the belief of this group assembled that because of the great movement of livestock east from the Pacific Coast a laboratory on the Pacific would be the least desirable because of the greater possibility of wide dissemination of the disease in the event of its escape from the laboratory; be it further

Joint resolution relative to the Federal Livestock Disease Research Laboratory

Whereas the Congress of the United States has enacted legislation providing for the Livestock Disease Research Laboratory with particular reference to foot-and-mouth disease; and

Whereas neither a site for such laboratory has as yet been selected nor have funds been appropriated for it; and

Whereas the need for such a laboratory is very great in view of the outbreak of the foot-and-mouth pestilence in the Republic of Mexico; and

Whereas because of the large movement of livestock east from the Pacific coast, the establishment of the laboratory on the Pacific slope would be least desirable because of the greater possibility of wide dissemination of the foot-and-mouth disease in the event of its escape from the laboratory; and

Whereas several years will be consumed before it will be possible to construct and equip a laboratory during such time research could be greatly furthered by sending young men abroad to work with foreign research laboratories: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States immediately to make provision for the construction of a livestock disease research laboratory with particular reference to foot-and-mouth disease other than on the Pacific slope, and during the interim prior to the completion of such laboratory to make provision for sending young men abroad to work with foreign research laboratories in the accomplishment of scientific research with respect to the control of foot-and-mouth disease; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to every Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States.

CALIFORNIA STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE,
Sacramento.

On January 17, 1949, the California State Board of Agriculture met in regular session at Sacramento, Calif., and had as its guests and participants in its deliberations, representatives of the California Farm Bureau Federation, California Cattlemen's Association, California Wool Growers Association, California Farmers, Inc., the Agricultural Council of California, and the Agricultural Department of the California State Chamber of Commerce. The following motion was unanimously adopted by the board with the concurrence of all those in attendance at the meeting:

"Whereas the Congress in its wisdom enacted certain legislation in 1930 designated as the Tariff Act of 1930 (46 Stat. 689) prohibiting the importation of animals susceptible to foot-and-mouth disease or products thereof from countries in which foot-and-mouth disease exists; and

"Whereas attempts have been made from time to time to break down the provisions of this congressional enactment; and

"Whereas the Seventy-ninth Congress enacted Public Law No. 522, approved July 24, 1946, authorizing the construction of a livestock quarantine station on Swan Island; and

"Whereas regulations for the operation of the Swan Island quarantine station have been proposed by the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture; and

"Whereas the proposed regulations provide for importation onto Swan Island of animals susceptible to foot-and-mouth disease from areas in countries in which statement is made by the veterinarians of the country in question that foot-and-mouth disease has not existed in that area 60 days immediately preceding: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we strongly oppose such regulation and point out that it is in violation of the intent of the Tariff Act of 1930 and constitutes a decided weakening of our sanitary embargo; be it further

"Resolved, That we urge and recommend, with the greatest emphasis possible, that the terminology of the Tariff Act and the intent of the Tariff Act be incorporated into law and regulations to the effect that animals susceptible to foot-and-mouth disease may not be imported onto Swan Island from any country in which it is determined that foot-and-mouth disease exists."

"Senate Joint Resolution 8

"Joint resolution relative to the proposed International Animal Quarantine Station on Swan Island

"Whereas the people of this State remember with the direst apprehension the outbreaks of foot-and-mouth disease in 1924 and 1929 and the paralyzing effect each of these outbreaks had upon the economy and welfare of California; and

"Whereas the bulwark of protection against the introduction of foot-and-mouth disease into the United States or this State has been subdivision (a) of section 306 of chapter 497 of the United States Statutes of 1930, providing that if the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States determines that foot-and-mouth disease exists in any foreign country, he shall officially notify the Secretary of the Treasury and give public notice thereof, and thereafter, and until the Secretary of Agriculture gives notice in a similar manner that such disease no longer exists in such foreign country, the importation into the United States of cattle, sheep, or other domestic ruminants, or swine, or of fresh, chilled, or frozen beef, veal, mutton, lamb, or pork, from such foreign country is prohibited; and

"Whereas restrictions on importations have from time to time been issued pursuant to the authority of Congress and by that means foot-and-mouth disease has been kept from the United States or any part thereof; and

"Whereas chapter 592 of the United States Statutes of 1946 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, to establish and maintain on Swan Island, situate in the Caribbean Sea, an international animal quarantine station and permits the Secretary of Agriculture, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, but subject to regulations prescribed by him to prevent the introduction into the United States of communicable diseases of animals, to permit animals to be brought into the Swan Island Quarantine Station from any country, including those in which the Secretary of Agriculture determines that foot-and-mouth disease exists and to permit the same to be subsequently imported into other parts of the United States under the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture; and

"Whereas on December 7, 1948, the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States gave notice of his intention to issue regulations relating to the Swan Island Quarantine Station, which regulations permit ruminants and swine to be shipped into the quarantine station if they originate in an area in a foreign country which has been free from foot-and-mouth disease for at least 60 days immediately preceding the date of movement of the ruminants and swine therefrom and after quarantine at Swan Island for not less than 90 days may be brought into the United States; and

"Whereas the report on foot-and-mouth disease made to the Senate of California on March 18, 1948, by the senate interim committee on livestock diseases, created by senate resolution 145 of the 1947 session of the California Legislature, shows that 316 Cebu bulls were landed on Sacrificios Island in April of 1946 and were removed from said island to the vicinity of Vera Cruz, Mexico, on the 28th of September 1946, and were thereafter inspected by two veterinarians of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture and found to be free from foot-and-mouth disease and 3 weeks thereafter foot-and-mouth disease broke out in the vicinity into which the Cebu bulls has been imported; and

"Whereas the regulations for the operation of the Swan Island Quarantine Station proposed by the Secretary of Agriculture can therefore not give any assurance that Swan Island will not become the avenue through which foot-and-mouth disease will be introduced into the United States; and

"Whereas the California State Board of Agriculture at its meeting on January 17, 1949, attended by representatives from the California Farm Bureau, the California Cattlemen's Association, the California Wool Growers Association, California Farmers, Inc., the Agricultural Council of California, and the Agricultural Department of the California State Chamber of Commerce, adopted a resolution with the unanimous concurrence of those in attendance, that the regulations for the Swan Island Quarantine Station should prohibit the importation into the United States of animals susceptible to foot-and-mouth disease from any country in which it is determined that foot-and-mouth disease exists: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture thereof that no action be taken for the use of Swan Island as a quarantine station with respect to the importation into this country of animals susceptible to foot-and-mouth disease from any country in any part of which exists foot-and-mouth disease, and respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to this effect; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to every Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. O'CONOR, from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

S. J. Res. 31. Joint resolution to provide for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 71).

By Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

S. Con. Res. 10. Concurrent resolution to provide additional funds for the Joint Committee on Labor-Management Relations; with amendments (Rept. No. 70); and, under the rule, referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE (S. REPT. NO. 69)

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Rules and Administration I report favorably Senate Resolution 15, relating to limitation of debate in the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement in regard to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received.

The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement in regard to the report.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I have conferred with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], who joined with me in submitting the resolution, and we have agreed to recommend to other Senators that no definite action be taken on it by the Senate until Monday, February 28.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unless the Senate gives unanimous consent, the Chair holds that discussion is not in order.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I fear that if we were to enter into a discussion of this question, the Senator might be taken from his feet, and other Senators might not have an opportunity to ask him questions. I respectfully suggest that this discussion be delayed until the conclusion of morning business, and then if there are any questions, they can be asked without any parliamentary situation interfering.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, in connection with the report from the Committee on Rules and Administration which has just been submitted by the chairman, I submit minority views of those who are opposed to the resolution. The minority views are concurred in by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], and myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The minority views will be filed.

Mr. STENNIS. I ask that they be printed along with the majority report.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANTS TO COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Rules and Administration I report favorably a resolution, which I ask to have read, and for which I ask immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 66), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is authorized, until otherwise provided by law, to employ two additional professional staff members and three additional clerical assistants to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at rates of compensation to be fixed by the chairman in accordance with section 202 (e) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 and the provisions of Public Law 4, Eightieth Congress, approved February 19, 1947.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, do I correctly understand from the Senator from Arizona that the resolution was considered by the Committee on Rules and Administration, and that the report submitted is the unanimous report of that Committee, allowing two additional professional staff members and three additional clerks in the Judiciary Committee, until otherwise ordered?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct. The situation as presented to the Committee on Rules and Administration by members of the Committee on the Judiciary is serious and urgent. The Judiciary Committee has pending before it some 500 bills. More than a third of all bills introduced in the Senate are referred to the Judiciary Committee. The additional assistants are needed immediately. For that reason, members of the Committee on Rules and Administration approve the request. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Reserving the right to object, may I ask one more question? In substance, does not the resolution amend the Legislative Reorganization Act with respect to the number of assistants authorized for the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. HAYDEN. It really places the Committee on the Judiciary in the same exceptional position as that enjoyed by the Committee on Appropriations, in recognition of the fact that it has more work to do, since it handles a greater number of bills than do the other committees of the Senate. It therefore requires the additional help.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. But the Committee on Rules and Administration is doing it in this manner, rather than changing the law.

Mr. HAYDEN. It would require a joint resolution to amend the law.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not wish to question the Senator, but I do not think we should let stand the statement that an amendment of a rule of the Senate requires a joint resolution. The act, on its face, clearly states that rules relating to the Senate may be changed as other rules are changed in the Senate, by action of the Senate alone. I do not think there should stand on the record a statement that we cannot change the Reorganization Act except by action of the two Houses.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I was led into that statement by the fact that the proposal was originally presented in the form of a joint resolution which required action by the House. The suggestion was made to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee that it be changed to a simple Senate resolution and be taken care of in that way.

Mr. TAFT. Is this a permanent change, or is it merely for the present Congress?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is a permanent change. Of course, the money will have to be appropriated hereafter by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. TAFT. There is, then, a change in the rule involved?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The resolution says "until otherwise provided by law." It does not seem to me to be a change in the rules.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to read the provision of the Reorganization Act with reference to this point:

The following sections of this title are enacted by the Congress:

(a) As an exercise of the rule-making power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, respectively, or of that House to which they specifically apply; and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(b) With full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change such rules (so far as relating to the procedure in such House) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of such House.

So that those rules can be changed so far as they relate to Senate committees by a simple Senate resolution, and do not require a joint resolution.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is a correct statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

THE ALUMINUM SHORTAGE — CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN SENATOR BUTLER AND THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD copies of several letters I have exchanged with the Secretary of Commerce regarding the severe shortage of aluminum and aluminum conductors.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECEMBER 28, 1948.

Hon. CHARLES SAWYER,
Secretary of Commerce,
Department of Commerce,

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: During recent months I have become increasingly concerned with the severe shortage of aluminum for the manufacture of wire and other electrical equipment because of the way it is holding up our rural electrification program in Nebraska. I believe that this aluminum situation is the worst shortage we have today in this country, bar none.

In my State alone, loans have been approved by Rural Electrification Administration for extension of electric service to beween seventy and eighty thousand consumers but only about 40,000 have been connected up. During the last fiscal year, loans were approved to serve over 12,000 additional consumers but only 7,000 new rural establishments actually received power during the same period. In many cases, farmers are forced to wait years for current after signing up. Orders placed today for aluminum rod simply go into a backlog which will take from 2 to 5 years to work off. If the supply situation in any industry can be called critical, certainly aluminum is that industry.

Under these circumstances, it seems to me of the utmost urgency that some system be worked out to take care of the most essential needs for virgin aluminum. Under the provisions of Public Law 395, passed last year, you have the power to work out, in cooperation with the industry, a program of voluntary allocations to meet such needs. This method has been used with some measure of success for some industries, such as steel, and I am a little surprised that no action has yet been taken to meet the aluminum situation in the same manner. As I understand, some segments of the industry have expressed a willingness to cooperate with the Government in working out such an agreement. Certainly this method is worth a try.

It is my opinion that rural electrification should receive a priority for aluminum second only to our defense program. Under the present situation, the program is certainly not faring very well. REA co-ops and districts are constructing nearly three-fourths of the rural mileage, but I do not believe they are receiving that proportion of the production of rural conductor sizes. Meanwhile, there seems to be plenty of aluminum for all sorts of new nonessential uses. I am advised that 85 percent of all the needs for aluminum could be met just as well with scrap as with virgin metal.

It seems to me it is time to put first things first. This REA program is of the utmost importance to farmers and to our food production effort. Farmers all over the country have been promised electric service for years now, and those promises ought to be kept.

I do believe it is high time that some action be taken on this problem. If you were not aware of the seriousness of this situation before, I hope you will undertake an immediate inquiry and let me have the benefit of your comments on this proposal.

Yours very truly,

HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senator, Nebraska.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, January 10, 1949.

The Honorable HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senate,

DEAR SENATOR BUTLER: Reference is made to your letter of December 28, 1948, expressing your concern over the severe shortage of aluminum for the manufacture of wire and electrical equipment and the adverse effect of this shortage on the construction of rural-electrification facilities.

This Department is fully aware of the difficulties faced by the aluminum industry in its efforts to supply current demand, which exceeds the supply by a very substantial margin. There is attached a statement showing our estimate of supply and demand for the 12 months' period ending June 30, 1949. Our estimate indicates a shortage of 500,000,000 pounds during this period; other estimates run as high as 1,000,000,000 pounds shortage.

You suggest that the requirements for aluminum for rural electrification should receive a priority second only to national defense, and you raise a question as to why the voluntary agreements under Public Law 395 have not or cannot be used for this purpose. Some months ago the Department discussed the possibilities of voluntary allocations with the three producers of primary aluminum. Up to this time, only one of these producers fabricates redraw rod for manufacturing cable and wire. Assuming that this producer had the facilities to increase production substantially of wire rod, the full burden of supplying an increased amount of material for wire making would fall on this one company. Since such agreements are purely voluntary, there is no way in which the objective you mention could be achieved unless the company volunteered to divert its facilities and materials to this particular end use.

Under these circumstances, a voluntary agreement affecting only one producer seems impracticable. If one or both of the other producers would undertake the fabrication of redraw rod, a more equitable basis would be established for a voluntary agreement to increase the output of the raw material for cable and wire manufacture.

I am asking my staff to again discuss the distribution of aluminum with the three producers of primary metal. Any discussion of the possibility of a voluntary agreement will necessarily be exploratory, since Public Law 395 expires February 28 next. If additional facilities are installed by the industry for the fabrication of wire and cable rod and if the voluntary provision of Public Law 395 is extended beyond the present termination date, there is a possibility that the Department will give consideration to proposing a voluntary agreement to increase the supply of aluminum wire and cable.

As you know, the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee held hearings on December 28 to explore the requirements for aluminum for rural electrification and to obtain data from the aluminum industry with respect to production and distribution. When available, the information developed at this hearing, especially with respect to the aluminum industry's attitude toward increasing the production of materials for the manufacture of cable and wire, may be helpful to us in dealing with this problem.

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS C. BLAISDELL, JR.,

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Reference is made to your reply of January 10, 1949, to my letter of December 28, 1948, regarding the shortage of aluminum.

Your reply contains many useful facts, but for some reason which I cannot understand, you have marked the whole reply confidential. Frankly, I cannot understand at all why this material should be confidential, with the possible exception of the small part relating to military needs. For that reason, I feel I must make a formal request that you indicate to me which parts of this letter may be made available to the public.

Your reply to this request will be appreciated.

Yours very truly,

HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senator, Nebraska.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, February 16, 1949.

The Honorable HUGH BUTLER,

DEAR SENATOR BUTLER: In reply to your letter of February 4 concerning the confidential letter of January 10 from this office on aluminum, I wish to advise you that the reason the letter was marked "Confidential" was to conceal the demands for national-security programs.

There is no objection to your making public the statements in the body of the letter. However, since the time that letter was written additional information has been obtained, and a new tabulation is attached giving the estimated supply-requirements position of aluminum for the calendar year 1949. You will note that this statement lumps all of the requirements, and in this form the information can be made public.

The new figures on supply and requirements make necessary a change in the second paragraph of the letter of January 10, as follows:

"This Department is fully aware of the difficulties faced by the aluminum industry in its efforts to supply current demand, which exceeds the supply by a very substantial margin. There is attached a statement showing our estimate of supply and demand for the calendar year 1949. Our estimate indicates a shortage of 640,000 short tons during this period. The estimate, both for supply and requirements, is based upon the continuation of a high level of business activity, with no interruption to supply and the continuation of a high level of demand."

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES SAWYER,
Secretary of Commerce.

FEBRUARY 16, 1949.

Hon. CHARLES SAWYER,
Secretary of Commerce,
Commerce Department,

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: With reference to my previous inquiries regarding proposed action to be taken to handle the aluminum shortage, your attention is invited to the fact that by the terms of Public Law 6 of this Congress your authority to control the distribution of scarce materials, such as aluminum, has been extended until September 30 of this year.

It appears to me that this aluminum bottleneck could be broken overnight and ample aluminum made available for rural electrification if the Department of Commerce would move promptly under this law to work out a system to take care of this vital need with the aluminum industry. It is my understanding that a very small portion of the aluminum output, considerably less than 10 percent, is now made available for the manufacture of aluminum conductor. The entire aluminum shortage could be solved for the rural systems through a moderate increase in this percentage.

Inasmuch as I have previously written you on two occasions and have yet to receive a reply other than some confidential information which I am not permitted to make public, I would appreciate being informed of your intentions in this matter. The authority granted by this legislation has been used very effectively in dealing with the steel industry, and I can see no reason why it could not be equally effective in handling the aluminum situation.

Yours very truly,

HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senator, Nebraska.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, for some time I have been urging that the Department of Commerce proceed promptly to set up a voluntary allocation plan with the aluminum industry, so as to make sure that enough aluminum is found to permit the rural electrification program to proceed rapidly. This aluminum situation is probably the worst shortage we face today. The Department of Commerce has told me that there will be a shortage of 640,000 short tons during the calendar year 1949.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must admonish the Senator from Nebraska that speeches are not now in order.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I am making a statement in connection with the insertion in the RECORD of the correspondence I have had with the Secretary of Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; we can make no distinction between such a statement and a speech. The Senator may have the statement printed as a part of his remarks if he desires.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my statement may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, for some time I have been urging that the Department of Commerce proceed promptly to set up a voluntary allocation plan with the aluminum industry, so as to make sure that enough aluminum is found to permit the rural electrification program to proceed rapidly. This aluminum situation is probably the worst shortage we face today. The Department of Commerce has told me that there will be a shortage of 640,000 short tons during the calendar year 1949.

Recently we were told at a congressional hearing that an order placed today for aluminum conductor with the Aluminum Co. of America would not be filled until 1953. Thousands of poles have been set in place by rural co-ops, but construction cannot be completed until the aluminum wire is delivered. It is absolutely essential for the Government to take immediate action to break this bottleneck.

Under the provisions of Public Law 395, of the Eightieth Congress, voluntary agreements have been worked out very successfully with the steel industry to provide sufficient steel for essential uses. I believe that rural electrification should have a priority second only to national defense in securing aluminum. It will be noted from one of the tables I introduced that only 6 percent of the aluminum is going into power transmission, and it certainly seems that additional supplies of aluminum could be made available for electrification without injuring any of the other industrial users.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MAYBANK:

S. 964. A bill for the relief of Cole M. Shaw and M. M. Hendrix; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IMMIGRATION QUOTAS

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for preference under the immigration quotas, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bill prepared by me be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanatory statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 967) to provide for preference under the immigration quotas, introduced by Mr. FERGUSON, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. FERGUSON was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FERGUSON

This measure is a companion bill to H. R. 946, introduced in the House by Mr. HERTER, of Massachusetts. It is identical in language and purpose with the Herter bill.

This bill would amend section 6 of the Immigration Act of 1924 in order to revise the classes of immigrants who are to be granted preferential status in the issuance of quota immigration visas by American consular offices abroad, having particular regard for the national interest in fixing preferences.

It does not alter the presently authorized volume of immigration into the United States. Although operating in the direction of selective immigration it does so within the framework of basic policy as established by Congress in existing law, wherein preferential treatment for quota immigration is prescribed. It acts to relieve an administrative burden imposed by Congress through its failure to make statutory provision for the treatment of quota immigrants who are not accorded preferential status.

In order that the purpose and scope of the bill may be clearly understood it is necessary to review provisions of the present law and administrative procedures thereunder.

Section 6 of the Immigration Act of 1924 provides that each national origins quota (except the quota for India and the quota for China) shall be divided into two halves, which shall be available to certain classes of immigrants commonly referred to as first-preference and second-preference classes.

The first half of the national origins immigration quotas (excepting India and China) is available to first-preference classes which consist of alien parents of citizens of the United States who are at least 21 years of age, the alien husbands of citizens of the United States regardless of age, but who were married on or after January 1, 1948, and, in quotas of 300 or more annually, to aliens who are skilled in agriculture.

The second half of the national origins immigration quota, plus any portion of the first half not required for the issuance of immigration visas to qualified immigrants of the first-preference classes, is available to second-preference classes which consist of the alien wives and the unmarried alien children of aliens who are lawful permanent residents of the United States.

By section 4 (a) of the Immigration Act of 1924 alien wives, the unmarried minor alien children, and the alien husbands of American citizens are entitled to nonquota immigrant status, provided in the cases of such husbands that the marriage occurred before January 1, 1948.

Immigrants who are brothers, sisters, uncles, aunts, nieces, nephews, or nonrelative of American citizens or of lawfully resident aliens are not entitled either to preferential consideration under the quotas or to nonquota status. They are considered to be nonpreference quota immigrants. They may immigrate under the quotas only in the event the demand on the part of qualified immigrants of the preference classes does not exhaust the quotas.

It may be observed that just one occupation class is granted preferential consideration under the quotas. Skilled agriculturists are entitled to first-preference classification provided the quota to which they may be chargeable under the law is at least 300 annually. Otherwise, however, no alien may come or be brought to this country for permanent residence, no matter how highly skilled he may be as a worker, technician, or scientist, unless he happens to be classifiable as a nonquota immigrant, in a preference class, or if as a nonpreference quota immigrant he finds a place high enough on the list of nonpreference applicants to take advantage of any otherwise unused quota.

In administering the quota provisions of the law with respect to nonpreference immigrants the administrative authorities devised a waiting-list procedure. Such improvisation was necessary because Congress did not specifically deal with this category of immigrants in the law, having limited itself in its legislative action to the preference classes.

The waiting-list procedure was soundly conceived by the administrative authorities, in the absence of statutory direction, in accordance with the accepted democratic custom of first come, first served. Faithfully observed by consular authorities, it has imposed a great administrative burden in the face of pressure to grant exceptions. At the same time, it has necessarily operated to exclude numerous aliens whose admission to the United States in permanent status would undeniably have been in the national interest.

It is believed that the time has come for Congress to review the provisions of the Immigration Act of 1924 and its administration so that important considerations of national interest may be brought to bear in fixing preferences and so that orderly and desirable procedures may be effected under which administrative authorities may operate in enforcing the law.

The proposed bill would provide that the first 10 percent of any quota may be used for the issuance of immigration visas to aliens whose immigration into the United States would be desirable from the viewpoint of our national interests. This would be without regard to any relationship, or nonrelationship, such citizens may have to any citizen or resident of the United States.

Appropriate agencies of the government would have to give their approval to the immigration of aliens in this first 10 percent of the quota. This is to establish necessary safeguards against a possible abuse of the privileges to be granted.

The administrative authorities in the Executive branch of the government are being approached regularly by business concerns and others who are interested in bringing to this country aliens skilled as workers, technicians, or scientists who are needed in American business, research, or enterprise. The administrative authorities are helpless to assist, however, when they find the alien concerned is entitled to no preference under the law and is chargeable to a quota which is heavily oversubscribed and in fact would be barred under the contract labor feature of existing law.

In addition to facilitating the immigration of an alien whose services would be a distinct contribution to our economy, the proposed bill would provide for those whom an agency of the government may be anxious to procure for technical or scientific purposes in connection with improvement of the National Defense Establishment. Also, aliens who have been working for the United States in foreign countries, often at the risk of their lives or personal safety and whose immediate immigration into the United States is desirable in the interest of national security, could be permitted to migrate to this country without having to wait for years until their turns as nonpreference quota immigrants are reached on the waiting lists.

One effect of this bill would be to obviate the necessity of having numerous private bills introduced in Congress each year, to facilitate the immigration of aliens whose migration would be highly desirable in the national interest.

Under this bill it is further proposed that the next 50 percent of a national quota would be made available to those immigrants who now fall in the so-called first-preference classes, which would become the second-preference category. The proportion of the total quota allotted to such immigrants is not reduced or changed.

The bill proposes that the next 20 percent of a quota may be available to immigrants who now fall in the second-preference classes, which would become the third-preference category. The proportion of the quota allotted to such immigrants is accordingly reduced from 50 percent under present law to 20 percent. However, experience has shown that uniformly such immigrants rarely use as much as 20 percent of a quota.

The bill also creates a new category, to be known as fourth-preference quota immigrants, to whom will be available the next 10 percent of any quota. This class would include immigrants who have certain close relations in the United States but who are not entitled to any preferential consideration as quota immigrants under the existing law.

A final 10 percent of a quota would be available, under the proposed bill, to what may be termed "new-seed" immigration, or those immigrants who have no close relatives in the United States and who do not fall within any of the various classes of immigrants entitled to preference under the first 90 percent of a quota.

The first preference quota status provided in the existing law for aliens skilled in agriculture would be repealed. It is felt for one thing that since provisions of the Displaced Persons Act of 1948 permit thousands of aliens skilled in agriculture to immigrate into the United States there is no apparent necessity for continuing the preferential status for agriculturalists under regular quotas.

One of the most important provisions of the proposed bill from the administrative point of view is that it would provide a statutory basis for the maintenance of consular waiting lists of quota immigrants. Under the proposed bill, visas to preferential quota immigrants in each class will be issued in the order that such preferential status is established. Nonpreference immigrants would be placed on waiting lists in the chronological order in which they qualify and are registered. Thus the integrity of the waiting-list procedure would be established by statute, which would assure protection to quota immigrants awaiting the issuance of visas, would preclude the exercise of administrative favoritism, and provide administrative authorities with a statutory buffer to pressure in the issuance of quota immigrant visas.

This bill is similar to one introduced in the Eightieth Congress, regarding which favorable reports were submitted to the House Judiciary Committee by the Departments of State and Justice, which are the agencies concerned with and responsible for the administration and enforcement of the immigration laws.

FEDERAL PROPERTY ACT OF 1949—OFFICE OF GENERAL SERVICES

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference two bills. One is cited as the Federal Property Act of 1949, and the other provides for the creation of an Office of General Services. I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bills prepared by me may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanatory statement presented by the Senator from Arkansas will be printed in the RECORD.

The bills introduced by Mr. McCLELLAN were each read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, as follows:

S. 990. A bill to reorganize and simplify the procurement, utilization, and disposal of Government property, and for other purposes; and

S. 991. A bill to create an Office of General Services as a central agency to have jurisdiction and control over certain administrative services in the executive branch of the Government, and for other purposes.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. McCLELLAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR M'CLELLAN REGARDING THE FEDERAL PROPERTY ACT OF 1949 AND A BILL CREATING AN OFFICE OF GENERAL SERVICES

I am introducing today two bills, one of which is cited as the Federal Property Act of 1949, and is similar to a bill reported favorably by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments in the Eightieth Congress (S. 2754). This bill, drafted by the administration and introduced by request, proposes to create an efficient, businesslike system of property management within the Federal Government. The bill would coordinate present property management functions of the Federal Works Agency and the Bureau of Federal Supply, and absorb the activities of the War Assets Administration.

I am also introducing, at the request of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch, a bill to create an Office of General Services. This bill is designed to carry out the recommendations made by the Commission in its report on "Office of General Services—Supply Activities." The primary purpose of this bill would be to coordinate top-level services of the Government in the fields of procurement, disposition of surplus property, supply, and property and records management.

These two bills contain certain features which are in conflict. The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments will examine each of them in detail, consult with officials of the Government agencies concerned with these activities and with experts associated with the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government who have been engaged in task force activities dealing with this subject, with a view to perfecting legislation that will be adequate to meet the needs of the reorganized services; and eliminate existing conflicts.

On January 24, I introduced another bill, S. 597, providing for the more economical operation of the General Supply Fund of the Bureau of Federal Supply, Department of the Treasury, at the request of the Department of the Treasury. This bill deals largely with the simplification and expansion of activities and would expand the General Supply Fund. It is designed to make the operations of the fund more flexible to the needs of any reorganization that might be effected under the above two proposals or under a bill that might be reported by the Committee on Expenditures involving the acceptable features of both measures.

These three bills comprise a general overall program designed to reorganize the purchasing and warehousing functions and effect a unified and efficient program for the distribution of supplies and materials throughout the Government, including provisions for executing utility contracts under a long-range program and make for greater economy and efficiency of operation.

The Committee will direct its efforts toward incorporating the main features of all three of these measures in one over-all reorganization proposal patterned on the recommendations made by the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch under its report relating to the creation of an Office of General Services, and on the needs of the various agencies concerned as proposed by the Administration.

DEDUCTION FOR INCOME-TAX PURPOSES OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO VOLUNTEER FIRE COMPANIES

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to allow a deduction for income-tax purposes, of contributions or gifts to volunteer fire companies, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill, together with an explanatory statement by me, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill, together with the explanatory statement, will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1007) to allow a deduction, for income-tax purposes, of contributions or gifts to volunteer fire companies, introduced by Mr. MARTIN, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 23 (o) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the so-called "charitable contribution" deduction for individuals) is hereby amended by striking out the word "or" at the end of paragraph (5) thereof, and by inserting at the end of paragraph (6) the word "or", and by adding after paragraph (6) a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(7) a volunteer fire company or association, not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any shareholder or individual, and operated exclusively for the benefit of the public;".

SEC. 2. Section 23 (q) of such code (relating to the so-called "charitable contribution" deduction for corporations) is hereby amended by inserting at the end of paragraph (4) the word "or", and by adding after paragraph (4) a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(5) a volunteer fire company or association, not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any shareholder or individual, and operated exclusively for the benefit of the public;".

SEC. 3. The amendments made by this Act shall be applicable only with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1948.

The statement presented by Mr. MARTIN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MARTIN

The purpose of this bill is to make possible a substantial increase in the effectiveness of the unselfish and praiseworthy service performed by volunteer fire companies and their members throughout the Nation.

It is designed to encourage more generous financial support of the volunteer fire companies by making contributions to such associations deductible for income-tax purposes in the same manner that donations to charitable and nonprofit educational organizations are now deductible.

Volunteer fire companies depend, for the most part, upon contributions from individuals and business concerns in the communities they serve.

The extent to which our communities rely upon volunteer fire companies for protection from fire is shown by the fact that there are upward of 14,000 volunteer associations in the United States with a total membership in excess of 650,000. These figures are most impressive when we consider that there are only 900 full-time paid fire departments, supported by local taxation, in all the 48 States.

In my own State of Pennsylvania nearly 200,000 public-spirited citizens are enrolled as members of about 4,000 volunteer associations. I cannot praise too highly the tremendous value of the civic responsibility they have accepted.

In the case of paid fire companies, supported by public funds, income-tax deduction is permitted for taxes paid by individuals and business firms for fire protection. To my mind voluntary contributions paid by citizens of rural communities should be tax exempt in the same manner.

The bill I have introduced is identical with H. R. 1822, sponsored by the distinguished Congressman at Large from Delaware, the Honorable J. CALEB BOGGS.

Representative BOGGS has given a great deal of thought to the problems of the volunteer fire companies. In discussing this proposal he has pointed out that the volunteer fire associations, to a great extent, are educational organizations. For many years they have conducted campaigns to teach the public modern methods of fire prevention. They have conducted classes among their members to train them in the latest methods of fire fighting and fire prevention that are constantly being developed.

It is most unfortunate that these improved methods cannot be applied in many communities because lack of funds prevents the acquisition of the necessary equipment and apparatus.

My object in offering this bill at this time is to give ample opportunity for its consideration in committee and I ask that it be acted upon favorably. I join with Representative BOGGS in urging that the situation which hampers the work of the volunteer fire companies be corrected by enacting this bill into law.

CONSOLIDATION OF GENERAL APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. BYRD (for himself, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. O'CONOR, Mr. KNOWLAND, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. FERGUSON, and Mr. WHERRY) submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 18), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, effective on the first day of the second regular session of the Eighty-first Congress, the joint rule of the Senate and of the House of Representatives contained in section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) (1) All appropriations for each fiscal year shall be consolidated in one general appropriation bill to be known as the 'Consolidated General Appropriation Act of ——' (the blank to be filled in with the appropriate fiscal year). The consolidated general appropriation bill may be divided into separate titles, each title corresponding so far as practicable to the respective regular general appropriation bills heretofore enacted. As used in this paragraph the term 'appropriations' shall not include deficiency or supplemental appropriations, appropriations under private acts of Congress, or rescissions of appropriations.

"(2) The consolidated general appropriation bill for each fiscal year, and each deficiency and supplemental general appropriation bill containing appropriations available for obligation during such fiscal year, shall contain provisions limiting the net amount to be obligated during such fiscal year in the case of each appropriation made therein which is available for obligation beyond the close of such fiscal year. Such consolidated general appropriation bill shall also contain provisions limiting the net amounts to be obligated during such fiscal year from all other prior appropriations which are available for obligation beyond the close of such fiscal year. Each such general appropriation bill shall also contain a provision that the limitations required by this paragraph shall not be construed to prohibit the incurring of an obligation in the form of a contract within the respective amounts appropriated or otherwise authorized by law, if such contract does not provide for the delivery of property or the rendition of services during such fiscal year in excess of the applicable limitations on obligations. The foregoing provisions of this paragraph shall not be applicable to appropriations made specifically for the payment of claims certified by the Comptroller General of the United States and of judgments, to amounts appropriated under private acts of Congress, to appropriations for the payment of interest on the public debt, or to revolving funds or appropriations thereto.

"(3) The committee reports accompanying each consolidated general appropriation bill, and any conference report thereon, shall show in tabular form, for information purposes, by items and totals—

"(A) the amount of each appropriation, including estimates of amounts becoming available in the fiscal year under permanent appropriations;

"(B) estimates of the amounts to be transferred between such appropriations;

"(C) estimates of the net amount to be expended in such fiscal year from each appropriation referred to in clause (A);

"(D) estimates of the net amount to be expended in such fiscal year from the balances of prior appropriations;

"(E) the totals of the amounts referred to in clauses (C) and (D); and

"(F) estimates of the total amount which will be available for expenditure subsequent to the close of such fiscal year from the appropriations referred to in clause (A).

The committee reports accompanying each deficiency and supplemental appropriation bill containing appropriations available for obligation or expenditure during such fiscal year, and each appropriation rescission bill, and any conference report on any such bill, shall include appropriate cumulative revisions of such tabulations.

"(4) The committee reports accompanying each consolidated general appropriation bill, and any conference report thereon, shall show in tabular form, for information purposes, for each wholly owned Government corporation or other agency of the Government which is authorized to receive and expend receipts without covering such receipts into the Treasury of the United States and which uses a checking account maintained with the Treasurer of the United States for that purpose (A) the estimated expenditures (other than retirement of borrowing) to be made out of such checking account for the fiscal year, (B) the estimated receipts (other than borrowing) to be deposited in such checking account for such fiscal year, and (C) the difference between (A) and (B).

"(5) The provisions of paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) shall not be applicable to appropriations of trust funds or to transactions involving public-debt retirement.

"(6) No general appropriation bill shall be received or considered in either House unless the bill and the report accompanying it conforms with this rule.

"(7) The Appropriations Committees of the two Houses may hold hearings simultaneously on each general appropriation bill or may hold joint hearings thereon."

INVESTIGATION OF FOOT-AND-MOUTH-DISEASE PROBLEMS

Mr. THYE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 72), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolved, That the authority of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, under Senate Resolution 223, Eightieth Congress, agreed to June 12, 1948 (providing for an investigation of all problems related to foot-and-mouth disease and its incidence in neighboring countries), is hereby continued during the Eighty-first Congress; and the limit of expenditures under such resolution is hereby increased to $8,000.

AMENDMENT OF ECONOMIC COOPERATION ACT OF 1948—AMENDMENT

Mr. BREWSTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 833) to amend the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION COSTS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE—AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado (for himself and Mr. CAPEHART) submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute, intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (S. 236) to clarify and formulate a consistent and coordinated national policy with respect to transportation costs in interstate commerce; to strengthen the antitrust laws of the United States and to provide for their more effective enforcement; and to promote competition by permitting sellers to have access to distant markets, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REORGANIZATION OF GOVERNMENT AGENCIES—AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado (for himself and Mr. MAYBANK) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (S. 526) to provide for the reorganization of Government agencies, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed.

EQUIPMENT FOR USE BY EXAMINATION APPLICANTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. LANGER submitted an amendment in the nature of the substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 86) to provide equipment for use by examination applicants, which was referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED OR ORDERED TO BE PLACED ON CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, as I was about to say a few moments ago when I reported Senate Resolution 15, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and I are recommending to Senators that no action be taken on the cloture resolution, which we jointly submitted, until Monday, February 28, for what we believe to be good reasons.

The resolution will not appear on the calendar until next Monday, February 21. Under a standing order of the Senate the junior Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH] has been designated to read George Washington's Farewell Address on February 22. For a number of years it has been customary to hold Jackson Day meetings on the 24th of this month, and a number of Senators intend to travel considerable distances to address various gatherings. They must leave ahead of that date, and it will not be convenient for them to return to their seats in the Senate until over the week end. Under those circumstances I think courtesy requires that there shall be a distinct understanding that no definite action will be taken on this controversial question until they return.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Does the Senator from Arizona mean that the resolution will be made the unfinished business on Monday, February 28; or do I correctly understand that it will be made the unfinished business on the 24th of February, but no action will be taken on it until the 28th?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I do not think it is important whether such action is taken on one or the other of those dates; but I will say that on Monday, February 28, a motion will no doubt be made to make the cloture resolution the unfinished business of the Senate; and, as one of the Senators who sponsored Senate Resolution 15, I wish now to state that on February 28 I shall seek an opportunity to present an argument in favor of its adoption by the Senate.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I wish to say that the Senator's statement is perfectly agreeable, so far as the junior Senator from California is concerned. I know the Senator from Arizona would also wish to point out to the other Members of the Senate that printed copies of the hearings are now available, so that anyone who wishes to study the hearings may have a chance to do so between now and the 28th of this month.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; copies of the hearings on Senate Resolution 15 have been sent to the offices of all Senators.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I think the distinguished Senator from Arizona, who is chairman of the committee, has stated the facts correctly. However, I wish the record to show, further, that the minority leader of the Senate, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], along with the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], met with the Senator from Illinois and agreed upon this program. At that time we agreed not to give any information to the press until the Senator from Arizona had an opportunity to explain the situation on the floor of the Senate, with the further thought that if there were any questions about it, they could be cleared up before the Members of the Senate in the session today.

It is the intention, let me say to the Senator from Arizona, who agrees with me in this position, to take up this matter definitely on February the 28th. There will not be any question about it. So far as I am concerned, that is the schedule which has been agreed upon, and the resolution will be taken up.

I wish to thank my friend, the Senator from California, who has been very much interested in this resolution, for agreeing to that proposition. It is my understanding that all the Republican members of the Rules Committee and a majority of the Democrats of the Rules Committee have agreed to the statement of facts which has been submitted here by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

EXCERPT FROM HEARING HELD BEFORE COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an excerpt from the hearing held before the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare on February 15, 1949, which includes testimony given by Mr. William Green, the head of the American Federation of Labor, given before the committee.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM HEARING HELD BEFORE COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE ON SENATE BILL 249, FEBRUARY 15, 1949

Senator MORSE. I completely agree and if I should be completely wrong in my interpretation of the law—and all lawyers are frequently wrong as to their interpretation of the law, as I have been in the past and expect to be again in the future—but if the future should prove that I am mistaken on this very important point of constitutional law, you will find me out barnstorming this country if the Supreme Court ever rules that this power exists for a constitutional amendment taking it away because I don't want any one man, just as I don't like to give the general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board the power you and I are objecting to, neither do I want to give to the President the power to exercise what might be caprice in time of great national stress by seizing the property of this country and moving the Army in, for example, to support him in such a seizure.

Mr. GREEN. I think we join with you in that, Senator.

Senator TAFT. Mr. Green and I perhaps will join you in that barnstorming tour. I look forward to it with a good deal of pleasure.

Senator MORSE. You spoke this morning in your testimony with regard to the limitations of the Taft-Hartley law on the political activities of unions. I make this statement as a foundation for the question I want to ask. I completely agree with you and have said so many times that I think the political-activity section of the Taft-Hartley law should be removed, and hope it will be. However, yesterday on the floor of the Senate there was a discussion by the Senator from Missouri and myself in regard to an Associated Press dispatch concerning a purported resolution that the A. F. of L. had passed to the effect that the A. F. of L. proposed to participate in political activity to the extent of running men for State legislatures and putting them on the A. F. of L. pay roll because they couldn't serve in the legislature and meet the financial expenditures of serving.

The Senator from Missouri and I expressed our complete disapproval of the basic principle of any such resolution. The distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] raised the question as to whether or not we weren't commenting on something without having the official statement. We said that was, of course, true, but it was in the press, it seemed to be a reliable report, and if it wasn't a reliable report, the A. F. of L. most certainly should make its position clear.

I now ask you, Mr. Green, if you can advise this committee because I think it has a direct bearing upon this political-activity section of the Taft-Hartley law, whether it is the position of the A. F. of L. that through its political activities it proposes to run men for the State legislatures and then put them on the A. F. of L. pay roll while they are serving?

Senator DONNELL. Might I interject just a moment for the purpose of absolute accuracy of the record?

Senator MORSE. I want it accurate.

Senator DONNELL. In the discussion on the floor of the Senate yesterday it was not stated that a resolution had been adopted by the A. F. of L. The press dispatch to which the Senator from Oregon refers was made by a high-ranking A. F. of L. official in a written statement presented to the labor league administrative council. By the labor league is meant Labor's League for Political Education, which is described in the article as the American Federation of Labor's political arm.

The article in the Kansas City Times in which this dispatch appeared also stated:

"Thus it was proposed and virtually decided that the league will help elect and thereafter augment the salaries of legislators endorsed by labor where they have insufficient funds of their own to get by."

Senator MORSE. I accept that. My question, Mr. Green, is: Has the A. F. of L. adopted a policy of supporting candidates for the State legislature in the future with the contemplation of putting the successful candidates on the A. F. of L. pay roll while they serve in the legislature?

Mr. GREEN. I am very glad to answer your question and do so in a very frank way. The American Federation of Labor never took such action. The executive council which met at Miami beginning January 31 and was in session for about 10 days never considered or acted upon any such proposal, and between conventions there is no agency clothed with authority to act upon such a question except the executive council of the American Federation of Labor.

It is clothed with authority to deal with questions of that kind between conventions and only between conventions. No other agency, no other authority, not even the executive officers of the federation of labor is clothed with authority to take action on a question of that kind.

So I can say to you truthfully, and the records of the meeting will show, that no consideration to this question or any action was taken at any sessions of the executive council's meeting.

Now I will tell you where I think the story originated. Shall I tell you?

Senator MORSE. Yes. I want to say I am very glad you are making this statement because I think it was very desirable that the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Oregon raised it yesterday because I can tell you from the reports I have already received that great injury has been done your organization by the story because I think widespread public disapproval would flow from the adoption of any such policy, and rightly so.

Mr. GREEN. Now, I think I am right on this, that the story grew out of a statement prepared by the representatives of Labor's League for Political Education. That league is functioning for educational purposes to acquaint our membership with developments in Congress and in State legislatures and with what is being considered and what is being acted upon, and so on.

Now the question came up as to what we could do or what we might be able to do in bringing about a repeal of these antilabor laws in about 12 or 13 States which were passed by State legislatures. In Maine we repealed one by a referendum vote. In Massachusetts we repealed one by a referendum vote at the last election. In New Mexico, I think it was, we repealed one at the last election.

The Supreme Court in its decision, made recently, upholding the constitutionality of these laws, made it very clear that the only way the workers in these different States could bring about a repeal of these acts was by calling upon the legislature and having enough in the legislature who are members of the legislature, State legislature, to vote to repeal them.

Senator DONNELL. May I ask Mr. Green whether he is referring to the recent decision in the case of Lincoln Federal Labor Union, A. F. of L. et al. v. Northwestern Iron & Metal Co. et al., and George Whitaker v. the State of North Carolina?

Mr. GREEN. Yes; that is right. Many of these States in the different laws make the closed-shop contracts illegal and prevent the workers, just like the Taft-Hartley law, from entering into closed-shop agreements. In the discussion that was brought up about it it was pointed out that there were many workingmen in these different States who could be elected to the State legislatures, but the trouble was that for economic reasons they were prevented from doing so because of the small amount of pay that was paid to the State legislator, which was too small for him to accept and care for his family.

Senator DONNELL. Where did this discussion come up?

Mr. GREEN. I understand it was reported to me that it came up in the discussion of, shall I say, publicity representatives of Labor's League for Political Education.

Senator DONNELL. What is that organization as referred to the A. F. of L.?

Mr. GREEN. That is an organization formed by the American Federation of Labor for educational and political reasons.

Senator DONNELL. Is it correct to call it, as the Associated Press dispatch does, the American Federation of Labor's political arm?

Mr. GREEN. They designate it that. I have never designated it as our political arm. It is Labor's League for Political and Educational purposes. Some one of the representatives there referred to that in a publicity statement only, and no action was taken on it so far as I understand, even by the executive authority of Labor's League for Political Education. I know no action was taken on it by our executive council because it was never brought to the attention of the council, and as a result of it, it was given a wide press play with statements that we were going to do that, and so on.

I can tell you truthfully there is no thought of the American Federation of Labor engaging in any such actions or such a policy. Now there is the story as best I can tell you.

Senator MORSE. I think it is a very important story and I think it is very appropriate that that story go out to the American people today.

Mr. GREEN. Yes.

Senator DONNELL. May I say to the Senator from Oregon that I think it is likewise important, but I should like in due time to examine Mr. Green further with reference to the matter. I don't want to infringe on the Senator's time.

Mr. GREEN. That will be very satisfactory.

Senator MORSE. I wanted to make clear your position because, as I said on the floor of the Senate yesterday, any such reported action by any labor organization in this country in my opinion would be a blow at sound representative government.

Now with that out of the way, I come back to this political restriction section of the Taft-Hartley law. Have you found that the Taft-Hartley law, Mr. Green, has interfered with political activities on the part of A. F. of L. unions because of its terminology?

Mr. GREEN. Oh, yes. It has prevented A. F. of L. unions from using funds—that is, the local organizations—for political purposes.

Senator MORSE. Do you believe that a voluntary organization of workers, namely, a trade-union, should have the right in this country if they wish to exercise it through democratic action within their union to engage in political activity if they so desire?

Mr. GREEN. I do. I believe they should because we always have ever since the organization of the American Federation of Labor, ever since it was formed. No one ever challenged that right heretofore.

Senator MORSE. Has it been the experience of labor, both on a State legislature level and on the Federal congressional level, that the attitudes of men elected to legislative bodies, their attitudes on labor have a direct bearing upon the strength of organized labor in this country?

Mr. GREEN. Certainly. They possess the power, they are clothed with the power and authority to take action which affects very seriously the life of the trade-unions, their very existence. We have found through experience as our organizations grow and expand numerically and otherwise, that we are in a far better position to deal on a more equitable basis with powerful corporations than we are when we are weakened or controlled by Government intervention and Government administration.

That point makes it clear that we are tremendously interested in the action of Congress and of State legislatures because they can take action that will limit, hinder, and weaken the activities of our trade-union movement.

Senator MORSE. In your opinion, has labor come to learn from experience that if it wants to protect its legitimate rights from being damaged by the passage of unwise legislation, it must keep itself in a position where it can support its friends and oppose its enemies in political campaigns?

Mr. GREEN. Yes, sir.

Senator MORSE. And in your opinion the operation of the Taft-Hartley law has greatly restricted labor's exercise of what it considers to be its democratic right as an organization to support its friends and oppose its enemies in political campaigns?

Mr. GREEN. Absolutely, yes, sir.

Senator MORSE. Now I turn, Mr. Green, to the question of the closed shop. Prior to the passage of the Taft-Hartley law the various labor organizations federated with the American Federation of Labor had entered into a great many closed shop collective bargaining agreements with American employers; is that not true?

* * * * *

Senator HUMPHREY. All right, now, the one question that was asked you, and I think it was a very good thing that you gave us the answer this morning, because I was disturbed to hear Senator DONNELL and Senator MORSE speak as they did speak on the floor of the Senate in reference to a statement which supposedly emanated from the American Federation of Labor about placing legislators on the A. F. of L. pay roll. I hope that we will have one of the Senators who will insert into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or reply to that statement so that we will have a complete record.

Mr. GREEN. I hope so, myself.

Senator HUMPHREY. I shall personally see that it is done.

Mr. GREEN. Thank you.

Senator DONNELL. I wish you would include the further examination of Mr. Green on that same subject.

Senator HUMPHREY. I will be very glad to do that. We will take all that Mr. Green has to say on that subject.

I wonder whether or not, Mr. Green—I personally would be opposed to it, and I want you to know that.

Mr. GREEN. Yes.

Senator HUMPHREY. I feel that it would be a very bad precedent.

I did hear Senator MORSE, however, say that he has asked on the floor of the Senate that every legislator divulge the sources of his income, not just have this business, you know, not just to get this pious look when it gets to be that way, just onesided look, like it is going to be provided with a little sum of money to keep the wolf from the door and keep the bacon and eggs coming home.

Mr. GREEN. Yes.

Senator HUMPHREY. Have you ever heard of any legislators representing any corporations that were ever elected to office?

Mr. GREEN. Well, I cannot name any at the moment.

Senator HUMPHREY. I can. [Laughter.] I mean who have as their clients——

Mr. GREEN. It has been my impression that there have been a good many representatives of corporations in Congress, in the Congress of the United States.

Senator HUMPHREY. Well, all of us have to have a means of income. I think that is perfectly true.

Mr. GREEN. Yes; that is true.

Senator HUMPHREY. Do you think there would be any difference, for example, if the American Federation of Labor put a man on their pay roll, let us say, as an organizer, after he was elected to the legislature, as compared to a man—I am talking about the legislature now; we are not talking about the honorable body of the United States Congress—you think there would be any difference between that and having a man who was elected to the legislature who, let us say, was an attorney for a public utility?

AWARD BY VIRGINIA JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF DISTINGUISHED SERVICE MEDAL TO RICHARD F. PENCE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the body of the RECORD a statement of the award by the junior chamber of commerce of the distinguished service medal to Attorney Richard F. Pence, of Roanoke, Va., as the outstanding young man of 1948.

He was nominated for the award by the attorney general of Virginia, the Honorable J. Lindsay Almond, and Mr. Pence is very deserving of the high tribute paid him.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHARLOTTESVILLE, February 19.—The Virginia Junior Chamber of Commerce tonight named Attorney Richard F. Pence, of Roanoke, to receive its distinguished-service award as the outstanding young man of 1948 at a banquet in the Monticello Hotel here. The presentation was made by Frank Rogers, Roanoke attorney and vice president of the University of Virginia Law School Alumni Association.

The award was given to Mr. Pence, in part, for his service as civil and police justice for Roanoke from which position he resigned in November to resume his law practice. He passed judgment in over 20,000 criminal cases and 3,000 civil cases.

Mr. Pence was nominated for the award by Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, Jr. In his nomination brief, Attorney General Almond said of Mr. Spence: "He brought his court to a high level of efficiency not heretofore attained and has won an unparalleled reputation for decisions characterized by foresight, practicality, and justice—impartial and equal for every race, creed, and nationality."

Mr. Pence is president of the Roanoke City-County Public Forum, Business Men's Club, and Patchwork Players; chairman of the Roanoke Battalion, United States Navy Organized Reserves; vice president of the Roanoke chapter, Mental Hygiene Association of Virginia, and Mental Hygiene Service; vice chairman of the board of stewards, Green Memorial Methodist Church; a member of the Welfare Conference; YMCA; Roanoke Council, Boy Scouts of America executive board; Community Fund; Kiwanis; Junior Chamber of Commerce; and Roanoke, Virginia, and American Bar Associations.

He is also a member of the board of directors of the American Red Cross, Community Concert Association, Family Service Organization, Travelers Aid Society, Touchdown Club, and the Western Virginia Division of the Automobile Association of America.

He was chairman of the Roanoke Navy Day program last year and is a recipient of the Roanoke Junior Chamber of Commerce Distinguished Service Award.

Mr. Spence received his BA degree from the University of Virginia in 1935 and his LLB degree from Harvard Law School in 1939. He was admitted to the Virginia bar in 1939.

He has been secretary and clerk to Justice H. B. Gregory, of the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals, and assistant Commonwealth's Attorney for Roanoke. He is now a member of the law firm of Dodson and Pence.

He was in the Navy for 4 years and served as director of the legal department of the United States Navy Military Government on Okinawa. He was discharged in 1946 as a lieutenant commander.

Judges for the award were Dr. Douglas S. Freeman, editor of the Richmond News Leader; William E. Blewett, vice president of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Co., and Mr. Rogers. James V. Creasy, of Charlottesville, was the Jaycee State chairman of the award project. Also on the committee were Charles F. Clark, of Roanoke, and Arthur S. Beauchamp, of Newport News.

Principal speaker at the banquet following the award presentation was Colgate W. Darden, president of the University of Virginia.

PROGRESS OF THE HOOVER COMMISSION

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in common with every other member of the Senate, I have been following with keen interest the remarkable work which has been done by the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch, commonly referred to as the Hoover Commission. My interest is perhaps enhanced by the fact that I was the Senate author of the bill which set up this nonpartisan commission. I have followed its work as closely as is possible without actually being a member. I know the intelligent way in which the work has been subdivided and organized, and I know that the men who made up the various so-called task forces were leaders in their respective fields, and that their names constitute a sort of roster of American ability.

Now the Commission has begun its reports, and of course some of these reports touch on controversial matters. It could not be otherwise. The work of the Commission would be without value if it did not stir some strong emotions.

Congress has a very heavy responsibility insofar as the report of this Commission is concerned because we must give legislative effect to the recommendations of the Commission. There is no doubt that this report will increase the efficiency of the Federal Government very much insofar as service to the American citizen is concerned, and the estimate is made that if all its terms are put into effect there will be a saving of $3,000,000,000 without any curtailment of service. Three billion dollars, Mr. President, is a very large sum, even today.

For all these reasons there is a great responsibility on Congress to give effect to the terms of the Hoover Report. The good results to be achieved and the high caliber of the personnel involved create such a strong presumption in favor of this report that it must be presumed to be right unless definitely proven to be wrong.

The first action which Congress must take is to pass legislation which will enable the President to put this reorganization into effect. This is the only way in which Government can be reorganized, for the very simple reason that by its very nature Congress cannot supervise a multiplicity of detailed reorganization measures. Let it be said that in enacting legislation giving the President the power to reorganize the Congress does not give up its ultimate control over the situation. If the President reorganizes in a way which to Congress seems mistaken, the Congress has a complete opportunity to prevent any harm from being done.

It is, however, of the utmost importance that this limited authority be given to the President without any exceptions being made. If any one agency is exempted from the operations of the Reorganization Act the American people are deprived of the benefit of whatever economies might flow from the reorganizing of the exempted agency, and an invitation is in effect extended to every other agency of the Government to get itself exempted, too. Obviously, if one agency is to be left out, all the other agencies of the Government will feel that they ought to be left out.

For all these reasons, it is very disturbing to note that in the House of Representatives the reorganization bill was amended so as to exempt the armed services from the normal scope of the Reorganization Act. About one-third of our budget today is attributable to the armed services; and it is certain that at least one-third—and perhaps more—of potential economies are to be effected in that field. I understand that a great deal of political pressure was generated in order to amend the bill in the House in this way, and that this pressure came from those who are interested in maintaining the Army engineers in their present status insofar as Federal contracts are concerned. Mr. President, I share the general admiration for the technical proficiency of the Army engineers. Nothing which I intend to say will reflect in any way on their technical proficiency. But it is perfectly conceivable that the statutory directive under which the Army engineers operate could put them in a wasteful relationship with other contract-making agencies, such as the Bureau of Reclamation, and that this might cause a great waste of money.

In any event, there can be no excuse for seeking to exempt the Army engineers from the operations of the Reorganization Act. Yet this is precisely what is being done.

In order to substantiate my assertion, I should like to read a copy of a telegram which was sent to a man whose name I am not at liberty to reveal. It came from Fargo, N. Dak., and reads as follows:

FARGO, N. DAK.

House bill H. R. 1569, Senate bill 526, would eliminate contracts by United States engineers, Bureau of Reclamation, etc., and create Public Works Department who would purchase machinery and do all Government work. This would eliminate distributors and place Government in competition with contractors. House takes this up Monday, Senate Wednesday. Imperative we have immediate action. Suggest you wire opposition to committee members at once. Those from our area on Senate committee: JOHN L. MCCLELLAN, Arkansas; KARL MUNDT, South Dakota; HUBERT HUMPHREY, Minnesota; ARTHUR VANDENBERG, Michigan, ANDREW SCHOEPPEL, House members: WILLIAM DAWSON, Illinois; HAROLD G. LOVRE, South Dakota; KARSTEN, Missouri; JOHN BLATNIK, Minnesota; RICHARD BOLLING, Missouri; RALPH HARVEY, Indiana. These are committee members on Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments.

Mr. President, I think it is deplorable and selfish for this type of pressure to be exerted. How can it be denied that this is a crass attempt to put personal selfish interest above public welfare. Frankly, I was shocked when the contents of this telegram were made available to me.

But I have found out that even more reprehensible actions have been taken. I have seen a letter, coming from one of our greatest industrial cities in America, signed by a prominent businessman—I am not at liberty to give his name—which reads as follows:

FEBRUARY 3, 1949.

I know you will be interested that our chamber of commerce was approached by the district engineer of the Army, asking that they oppose the Hoover Commission's proposal to transfer the civil functions of the engineers to the proposed Department of Public Works.

At a meeting of the board of directors today, a motion was made and seconded that we support the Army engineers, at which time I made a statement that while I had the highest respect for the engineers, I did not feel the chamber of commerce should oppose the work of the Hoover Commission, as certainly the Commission was composed of very high-grade men and that Mr. Hoover deserved our every support for the great job which he was doing for our country. I was ably supported by—

Another name which I am not at liberty to mention—

who made a motion that the chamber not oppose any of the provisions of the Hoover report, and this was carried almost unanimously.

Yours very truly.

Mr. President, we are accustomed to witnessing pressure being exerted by private citizens of America, and they have a right to exert this pressure even though one may disagree with what they are trying to accomplish. But when officers of the Army engineers undertake to stir up an agitation against the report of this eminent, distinguished and patriotic Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch, the time has come to call a halt. When an officer in the Army engineers undertakes to exert political pressure on Congress to tell Congress what it ought to do on a broad matter of national policy, that officer is stepping out of bounds and he is guilty of just as much of an impropriety as a Member of this Senate would be if he undertook to go onto a job which an Army engineer was supervising and tell him how he ought to mix the concrete.

The Army engineers have a fine standing in America. I know I have always honored them and regarded them as a shining example of all that is disinterested and patriotic. But they will lose their fine standing very rapidly if they, or any other group in the Government similarly situated, attempt to obstruct these praiseworthy efforts to promote the efficiency of the Government.

I have heard a good deal of talk in the past few years about the dangers of militarism in our Government and I have never paid any attention to it because I have had a life-long contact with military people, and among the ones I know I have never seen the slightest desire to take control of civilian affairs. The instance I have just cited is the first example I have ever seen of the military attempting to dominate the civil functions of the Government. Mr. President, I deplore it deeply and hope that it will not happen again.

ARMY AND NAVY NOMINATIONS

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as in executive session, I report numerous routine promotions in the National Military Establishment, and ask for their immediate consideration, and that the President be immediately notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent for the consideration of certain nominations as in executive session. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed, and the President will be notified forthwith.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, my attention was diverted to another matter momentarily. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire whether there was any objection to the nominations?

Mr. TYDINGS. There was no objection. They were unanimously reported, and they are purely routine.

NOMINATION OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. John L. Sullivan, will be absent from Washington for about 2 weeks in connection with the Navy maneuvers in the Caribbean. Several of the important positions under him have not been filled. Among them is the position of Assistant Secretary of the Navy, to which the President has nominated John Theodore Koehler. Mr. Koehler appeared before our committee this morning and made a very creditable showing. I was directed by the committee to ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, to report his nomination, and request that it be confirmed and the President notified, so that he may be on the job while Mr. Sullivan is absent on the Atlantic.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I inquire, does Mr. Koehler come from Wisconsin?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. Koehler came from Pennsylvania originally, and is living in Maryland at the present time. The committee is so advised.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection as in executive session, the nomination will be confirmed, and the President notified forthwith.

EXTENSION OF WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, on the calendar, order No. 37, is a bill (S. 829) to extend the office of the War Assets Administrator and the War Assets Administration from February 28, 1949, until June 30, 1949. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 2402.

The VICE PRESIDENT. House bill 2402, which is identical with the Senate bill, has come over from the House. Is the Senator asking that the House bill be considered?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 2402) to extend the office of the War Assets Administrator and the War Assets Administration from February 28, 1949, until June 30, 1949.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill H. R. 2402 was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 829 is indefinitely postponed.

THIRTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF LITHUANIA'S INDEPENDENCE

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, 1 year ago today I spoke here on the floor of the Senate on the occasion of the thirtieth anniversary of Lithuania's independence.

On that occasion I noted with profound sadness the unhappy events which have led up to that nation's total disappearance behind the implacable shrouds of the iron curtain. I expressed my fervent hope that the day was not too distant when the sunlight of freedom and the blessings of liberty would again be enjoyed by the people of Lithuania. I voiced my concern that the United States seemed to be shutting its eyes to the conditions which persist in that unhappy small nation.

A year has passed and yesterday marked the thirty-first anniversary of the declaration of independence by the people of Lithuania at Vilna on February 16, 1918. Again there is little cause for rejoicing or celebration. Our loyal Americans of Lithuanian descent, so many of whom fought in World War II to preserve individual dignity and freedom, have every reason to look to the Government of the United States for support and encouragement. They know that in Lithuania men and women are deprived of every possibility to enjoy civil rights, freedom of press, speech, and assembly, the right to express their will in free elections, and their right to worship in accordance with their religious convictions. They can tell you better than I of the mass deportations, the arrests, the quick trials, the reign of terror.

We in this country have rightly joined with other moral peoples in condemning the recent tragic case of Cardinal Mindszenty. But do we realize that in Lithuania there has been a systematic persecution of leading prelates of the church together with their assistants and associates? As part of my remarks, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point the statement of the Supreme Lithuania Committee of Liberation dated October 15, 1947, contained in its appeal to the United Nations, describing the treatment to which members of the clergy have been subjected under Soviet enslavement.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The wave of arrests has especially affected members of the clergy. On February 19, 1946, V. Borisevicius, Bishop of Telsiai, was arrested and sentenced to death. In the middle of December 1946, his auxiliary, Bishop P. Ramanauskas, was arrested and deported. T. Matulionis, Bishop of Kaisiadorys, was deported at the same time; he had previously endured Soviet imprisonment for 12 years (1920–32) and had been threatened by the Gestapo with confinement in a concentration camp. Recent persistent reports indicate the arrest and deportation of M. Reinys, Archbishop of Vilnius. Thus, at the present time there remains only one bishop in the entire country. Also arrested were the closest assistants of the bishops: Prelates Labukas, Pukys, Olsauskas, and others. That one may appreciate the wide range of arrests in the church, it is enough to mention those in Kaunas alone. Here there are 12 churches. Up to the beginning of 1947, the following Catholic priests of Kaunas had been deported: Canon V. Kieleska, pastor of the Carmelite parish; Rev. J. Dagilis, pastor of Vilijampole parish; Reverend Fabijanskas; Reverend Bubnys, pastor of the Resurrection Church; the Salesian Fathers, S. Gustas and B. Paukstys, of the Igulos Church; the prorectors of the Priests' Seminary, Canon Rauda, and Reverend Kuzmickas; the Jesuit Father Biliunas, of the Jesuit Church; Rev. J. Zelvys, of St. Anthony's Church, managed to go into hiding. In the provincial churches, the following were arrested: Reverends Janulaitis, Adomaitis, Ylius, Jonas Grigaitis, Sauklys, Mieldazys, Sliumpa, Vaisnora, Nagulevicius, Guteravicius, Gaizutis, Cimielis; Franciscan Fathers; Cepulis, Puedzlunas, Andraitis, and others—some 70 priests in all. Fearing persecution, about 150 priests have gone into hiding.

Mr. LODGE. These and other reported acts of incredible brutality are so shocking that it seems wholly inadequate merely to stand aside and refuse recognition to the unjustified annexation of Lithuania and the other Baltic countries.

It seems to me that we must do more. We should exhaust every possible means at our disposal to help this brave little nation resume her rightful place among the free and peace-loving countries of the world.

This will take courage, patience, and intelligence. To all Americans who have ties of friendship and family with the people of Lithuania, let me again express my profound hope that a way will be found to restore to that nation the liberty and freedom and prosperity which she deserves. May Lithuania's Independence Day be a day of true rejoicing.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I wish to remind the Senate that yesterday, February 16, marked the thirty-first anniversary of a declaration of independence by one of the liberty-loving peoples of the world—the Lithuanians.

Our country and Lithuania are linked by a common devotion to the ideals of freedom. Many thousands of our finest citizens are descended from Lithuanians who came to the United States from their ancient home on the Baltic Sea.

In cities and towns in many parts of our Nation, Americans of Lithuanian ancestry gathered at dinners and mass meetings to celebrate the Lithuanian day of independence. Because Lithuania has been occupied by a Soviet army since June 1940, the people there are not able to participate in open demonstrations. Their relatives and allies in more fortunate countries must celebrate for them.

Our Government has refused to recognize the conquest of Lithuania carried out by the Russian armed forces. We will never recognize the legality of such a conquest. Our diplomatic representatives have repeatedly protested against it to the Soviet Government.

The American people are convinced that the whole civilization of the world rests upon the rule of reason, of justice, and of law. Brutal oppression of a small nation by a large nation strikes at the very foundations of our international relationships.

Through the years of Soviet occupation, the people of Lithuania have never abandoned the struggle to restore their lost liberties. Hundreds of leaders in their flight for freedom have been deported to Siberia. Others have been arrested and executed. Many have been sent to Russian prisons because they would not bow to their Red rulers.

Our sympathies and our friendship go out to the Lithuanian people. We are sure that their gallant fight will have its reward. We know that the forces of liberty will always triumph over the forces of tyranny and terror in the long march of mankind.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement prepared by me on the occasion of the thirty-first anniversary of the founding of the Republic of Lithuania.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HERBERT R. O'CONOR

On this, the thirty-first anniversary of the founding of the Republic of Lithuania, all patriots of Lithuanian birth or ancestry throughout the world deserve a heartfelt salute from the people of the United States. The establishment of our own great country stemmed from the determination of our colonial forebears to rid themselves of oppression, and to set up a homeland where freedom would prevail. And our forebears were willing to fight, and die if need be, to realize their heart's desire.

What our forebears dared and suffered has been dared and suffered not for a few years, but for centuries, by the gallant people of Lithuania. They have plumbed the bitter depths of despair and suffering, the like of which the people of America have never known, and, God willing, may never know.

In their darkest moments today, however, every Lithuanian and person of Lithuanian ancestry may recall with pride the glories of Lithuania during the middle ages when, under Vytatus in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, they were the foremost state of all Europe. They can take consolation, too, in the magnificent achievements of the generation that followed the close of World War I and the proclamation of Lithuania as a free and independent state, on February 16, 1918.

No people in all the world have ever given more convincing evidence of their capacity for successful self-government than did the people of Lithuania following their reemergence as a free nation 31 years ago. They succeeded despite all the ravages of that first world war, and notwithstanding the looting of their natural resources during the generations under the Czars. With little opportunity during the several centuries immediately preceding to learn or practice the art of government, they, nevertheless, in the short period between World War I and II, were able to establish their new republic as a stable and enlightened member of the family of nations.

There is no possible ground for self-condemnation on the part of any resident or friend of Lithuania because of the loss of their freedom following the outbreak of World War II. First overrun and overwhelmed by the Russian hosts, then invaded by the Nazis under Hitler, and ruled rigorously for 3 years as a part of a new administrative province, Ostland, the unhappy and unfortunate people of Lithuania and the other Baltic states found even worse horrors in store for them in 1944 when the Russians once again poured over their beloved homeland like a tidal wave and with consequences just as devastating.

No need to detail here the untold horrors visited upon Lithuania under both Communists and Nazis. Suffice it to say that the firing squads never lacked victims, the labor camps were absolutely insatiable in their demand upon the population, the vast reaches of Siberia afforded a dread prison to which literally hundreds of thousands were sent to death or to privations far worse than death.

The joy with which the Treaty of Moscow was received in 1920 by the Lithuanian people turned into the sadness of despair when that treaty was violated so flagrantly and so completely by Russia. In that memorable treaty of 1920 Moscow had agreed to recognize without any prejudices the independence of the state of Lithuania and to renounce for all time all sovereignty rights which she had ever held in regard to Lithuania.

Today, despite her position of slave state of Russia, as the fourteenth Republic of the U. S. S. R., Lithuania has at least this consolation, that our own great nation has consistently refused to recognize the unlawful act of Russia in destroying Lithuania's independence. Our government has never recognized the absorption of Lithuania, or the other Baltic states into the Soviet Union, and continues, instead, to recognize the diplomatic representatives of those countries in the United States. America's attitude was expressed forcibly at the time by the then Acting Secretary of State, the Honorable Sumner Welles, when he said that the people of the United States are opposed to predatory actions no matter by whom they are carried on, and they are opposed likewise to any form of intervention on the part of one state, however powerful, in the domestic concerns of any other sovereign state, however weak.

What this country's official representative said in 1940, is just as true today. One may be sure that it will continue to be our country's principle, until when, in God's good time, Lithuania again regains its cherished independence. As the people of the United States sympathized with Lithuania in its time of anguish and travail, and watched with heartfelt interest the splendid progress in self-government made by this gallant people following 1918, so today all people of good will throughout America sympathize deeply with the sufferings that prevail today in Lithuania and among the many thousands of exiled Lithuanians throughout Asiatic Russia.

With this unhappy people, our prayers go up to Almighty God that the heavy hand of sorrow and slavery which has been laid upon their shoulders will be lifted in the not-too-distant future so that once again we may welcome Lithuania as a free nation of the world, and help its earnest, God-fearing people to a rebirth of national estate.

My own State of Maryland is vastly indebted to the industry and skills of its residents of Lithuanian birth and ancestry. We join ardently with them in cherishing the indomitable spirit of Lithuanian freedom now temporarily banished from their homeland. With them we look confidently forward, to the day when Lithuanian independence again will be a reality, and when February 16, Republic of Lithuania Day, will be a beacon shining brightly aloft, a joyful symbol to all the world that where a people is determined, come what may, not to accept anything less than complete freedom and independence, that noble aspiration will not be denied them by a just and gracious Deity.

AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, this morning the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and certain other Senators submitted a resolution dealing with a very important policy with regard to foreign relations, and I desire at this time to state my views with regard to the question.

On January 5, 1949, President Truman delivered his State of the Union message to a joint session of Congress. During that address, the President assured the American people as to the essential soundness of both our domestic and our international affairs, when he said:

> I am happy to report to this Eighty-first Congress that the State of the Union is good. Our Nation is better able than ever before to meet the needs of the American people and to give them their fair chance in the pursuit of happiness.
> Our domestic programs are the foundation of our foreign affairs. We are doing what we can to encourage free states and free peoples throughout the world, to aid the suffering and the afflicted in foreign lands, and to strengthen democratic nations against aggression. We are supporting a world organization to keep peace and a world-economic policy to create prosperity for mankind. Our guiding star is international cooperation. To this concept we have made a commitment as profound as anything in history.

Yet, nowhere, Mr. President, is there a single mention in this State of the Union message of the real state of our international relations, into which this guiding star of international cooperation has led us.

Mr. President, my grave concern for the future continues to grow as I watch the ominous administration strategy unfold following that State of the Union message.

Frankly, I am alarmed by the implications of the President's bold, new, five-point international program which he launched, out of the blue, during his inaugural address on January 20.

Mr. President, is it not a cause of alarm that, in order to put over this bold, new program, President Truman also now finds it necessary to revive the very government-by-crisis techniques by which all the other international programs, for which he now refuses to give an honest accounting, were sold to the American people?

Mr. President, no one is more conscious of the growing gravity of our international relations than I, and I yield to no one in my sincere determination to do my full part in protecting America's interests and strengthening our security at home and abroad.

Yet, as I have reflected on these startling new developments, I have been continually reminded of Tennyson's observation that "a half truth is the worst kind of a lie." It is perfectly obvious to me now that, by announcing this new adventure in international affairs without taking us into his confidence as to just what has happened to all the other international programs on which he so optimistically generalized only 2 weeks previous, President Truman is indulging in the most misleading and dangerous kind of a half truth.

Mr. President, such action not only embarrasses the elected representatives of the American people, it carries far more serious implications. Such action constitutes an expression of contempt for the constitutional prerogatives and duties of the legislative branch of our Government.

No one knows better than President Truman himself that Congress cannot possibly play its rightful role in intelligently evaluating, constructively criticizing, and helping creatively to formulate a sound basis upon which to implement his new international objectives until we know just what has happened to all the other slogans, programs, and principles to which we have committed this country during the war and postwar years.

The distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] gave expression to this obvious truth when, in response to the question, "What are your reactions to the President's speech?" he replied:

> I cannot pass judgment on the balance of his new aid programs until I know more concretely what he has in mind.
> I suggest, however, that we perfect existing plans before starting any new ones. The President himself says there are limits to our resources. I underscore that warning.

Mr. President, before Congress or the American people can intelligently act on the President's new international program they must find the answers to three of the most crucial questions ever to perplex this Nation.

The first question is, Just what has been accomplished to date by the commitments we have been discharging in support of the whole vast network of international policies and principles to which we have been a party in recent years?

What has been accomplished by discharging our commitments under the Atlantic Charter, the four freedoms, the Moscow Declaration, the Connally resolution, lend-lease, Casablanca, Cairo, Tehran, Yalta, unconditional surrender, UNRRA, the Potsdam Declaration, the Bretton Woods Agreement, the International Bank, the World Monetary Fund, the World Food Organization, the International Trade Organization, the United Nations, the British loan, the Morgenthau plan, the Italian, Rumanian, Hungarian, and Bulgarian treaties, the Truman Doctrine, the Marshall plan, the Act of Chapultepec, the Rio Compact, and all the other slogans and schemes which the American people have loyally supported with their treasure and their blood?

Why is it, Mr. President, that President Truman refuses to take us into his confidence and tell us just where these commitments have taken us? The only answer that is convincing to me, is that President Truman, by his own arbitrary actions, is now seeking to escape responsibility for what has really been happening behind the smoke screen of administration propaganda during these tragic years.

Of course, such a deliberate effort to postpone a day of reckoning makes it all the more imperative that we intensify our efforts to ferret out the real facts ourselves. The American people want to know the facts. We now know from bitter experience that when secret agreements are entered into in our name and kept from us for long periods of time, we learn of them too late to do anything but take the tragic consequences. What is even more tragic is that, in this process, the burden of responsibility for what has happened becomes lost in the mad, face-saving scramble to pick up and put the pieces back together.

No one has more clearly seen this very development coming to a head in our own times than Walter Lippmann, who wrote on January 11, 1949:

> It is not healthy in the long run to treat foreign policy as something separate from the normal process of democratic government and of party responsibility. There are no statesmen wise enough, and no experts who are expert enough, to make decisions of life and death, when they are artificially insulated from the give and take of general debate.
> An unavoidable result is to thrust excessive power upon men who are not accountable to Congress or to the people, who are often unknown to the public, who decide questions of great moment without having to explain or to justify their actions.

It was Woodrow Wilson, himself, who prescribed the following preventative against such a development in the executive branch of Government, when he said in his book Congressional Government:

> The informing function of Congress should be preferred even to its legislative function. The only really self-governing people is that people which discusses and interrogates its administration.

Mr. President, these serious implications of the Chief Executive's refusal to take the American people into his confidence, and President Truman's persistent silence, force us back completely onto our own resourcefulness, to find the answers to these questions.

The second question which we must answer, before we can act intelligently on the President's new program is, "What has become of the bipartisan foreign policy, by which we have sought to implement our international policies and commitments of the past?"

We have been led to believe that it is the bipartisan policy that has kept our international relations free from partisan politics—that has made possible access to information so necessary for enlightenment of public opinion—and that has made possible a genuinely cooperative participation in the formulation and implementation of our foreign policies by majority and minority parties alike.

I now read Mr. Walter Lippmann's observation on what is happening to this bipartisan policy. This appeared in the Washington Post on January 11, 1949:

> The bipartisan system of the past 4 years was necessary in the circumstances, but we need not regret that the circumstances have changed. Useful, indeed, indispensable as it was, it had its grave disadvantages. It is one thing to be consulted just before or just after some critical decision is taken; it is quite another thing to share the responsibility from the outset in all the steps which lead up to and may compel the decision.
> Yet the effect of the bipartisan system has been to prevent discussion and debate.

Certainly the American people have been solemnly assured, by bipartisan foreign-policy architects of both parties, that this was not the case. Furthermore, we have been continually assured that this bipartisan policy was firmly rooted in, and specifically and adequately designed to protect, the principles of the Atlantic Charter and the traditional American principles upon which, and for which, this Nation has always stood.

On May 21, 1946, the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan, upon returning from his duties as United States representative at the London Foreign Ministers' Council, solemnly assured this body that—

> The Council was a complete success in developing at last, and in disclosing a positive, constructive, peace-seeking, bipartisan foreign policy for the United States. It is based at last upon the moralities of the Atlantic Charter and the San Francisco Charter.

There was not the slightest doubt expressed by the Senator that America's vital interests, security, and principles were not completely secure in the hands of the architects of this bipartisan policy. For the Senator insisted that it was—

> A policy which now substitutes justice for vengeance in these formulas of peace, which now insists upon ethnic recognitions that no longer traffic in the lives and destinies of helpless peoples, and which spurns expansionism as a plague upon tomorrow's peace and security.

Even as recently as January 5, 1949, in his state of the Union message, President Truman assured us that—

> We are following a foreign policy which is the outward expression of the democratic faith we profess.

Yet, nowhere, Mr. President, in his state of the Union message, nor in his inaugural address, nor in any other major speech or statement, has the President honestly told the American people what has happened to the bipartisan foreign policy, which we have been led to believe was an absolutely indispensable medium for the continuing success of our international ventures.

Is it not then, Mr. President, a matter of the gravest concern to find President Truman taking the initiative in deliberately destroying this bipartisan approach to our international problems, by presenting this new version of American foreign policy, without making the slightest attempt to conceal the fact that he had refused to take the Republican Party into his confidence on a single important issue to which he referred?

Is not this fact particularly true when we realize that this bold new adventure carries us even more deeply into the internal affairs of the other nations all over the world?

Yet, in the face of these grave implications, the only sop that has been thrown to the Republican supporters of the bipartisan foreign policy is a deliberate change in the ratio of the Foreign Relations Committee, and the Vice President's ingenious observation that he did not see why five Republicans could not cooperate with this kind of a foreign policy, as well as six.

Mr. President, why would President Truman assume responsibility for thus destroying the bipartisan foreign policy unless he is seeking to cover up the fact that in reality, throughout its operation, it has been making a mockery of constitutional government? Why would President Truman now take this action? It now appears that the bipartisan policy has made both its Republican and Democratic supporters in Congress the legislative goats of an official administration propaganda line—goats who have been effectively barred from access to the real facts of our international life.

Personally, I can reach no other explanation of what has been happening in administration circles. I assure my colleagues that it is no satisfaction for me to find that much as I have wanted to do my full part in protecting America's vital interests, I have never once been taken into the confidence of the architects of the "master plan" by which our over-all international relations have been guided.

Mr. President, I am referring to the master plan which is described in the United States News of February 7, 1947, from which I quote:

> During Mr. Byrne's tenure Mr. Acheson's principal contribution was a codification of American foreign policy, the first in many years. This was largely written by the Under Secretary, outlining in detail the United States policy toward every nation and area. In preparing the document Mr. Acheson acquired what some had complained that he lacked; a knowledge of the minutiae of international dealings.
> The brochure is, of course, top secret. Only two copies of it exist. One is kept in a State Department vault, the other by the Army's Chief of Staff, so that military and diplomatic policy may be integrated. As former Chief of Staff, General Marshall, of course, was kept up to the minute on foreign policy everywhere. He is now familiarizing himself with developments during his year in China mostly by a study of Mr. Acheson's book. While the Secretary digs into his job and prepares to attend the foreign ministers' meeting in Moscow in March, Mr. Acheson is largely running the Department on the basis of his own guide book.

Mr. President, I would like to ask the members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, if any one of them, whether a Democrat or Republican, has ever seen this "top-secret, master plan" of American foreign policy, or whether he has ever been informed of its basic contents?

I raise this point, Mr. President, because, if, during the operation of the bipartisan foreign policy, we have been made the "goats" of administration maneuvering, it is perfectly obvicus what is going to happen in the future after the President himself has abandoned even the pretense of genuine cooperation with both Congress and the American people.

Mr. President, I am convinced that the President's bold, new course of action also means that the alleged "unwillingness to rock the boat of our delicate international negotiations," which has been used during the past years as a convenient excuse for covering up secret diplomacy, and the suppression of honest and open debate, and criticism, has now become a deliberate Presidential strategy.

Let me assure my colleagues that I have no desire to impugn the motives of any man or political party. Yet, in the light of these developments, I do consider it my solemn duty now to see this whole matter through to its ultimate conclusion. I am moved to take this course of action because I believe that no President would so abruptly throw overboard an international program which has been laboriously developed over the years, both on the domestic and international level, nor so flaunt his power in the face of his own bipartisan supporters of both parties in Congress, unless he had become convinced that the real developments, for which he now refuses to account or to be held responsible, have become suicidal political liabilities.

Mr. President, I also know of no other course of action on my part that will answer the third and most crucial question of all, namely: "What has become of the moral principles for which we have been fighting?" These principles are, after all, the greatest stakes that have been involved in this game of international power politics we have been playing. Well, what has become of our American principles?

If I read the signs of the times aright, the optimistic pleasantries with which the administration seeks to put off every serious critic can no longer suffice to explain away the rising chorus of shocking charges that American principles and interests are being betrayed all over the earth, or to hide the frightening developments now taking place on the international scene.

Again may I say that I am not happy to admit that I now am forced to believe what, for a long time, I have more than suspected, that we have been following policies and commitments which have underwritten everyone else's interests but our own.

Mr. President, I have not come to this conclusion easily.

The first real shock to my high hopes for a just and lasting peace came to me when, following the Tehran Conference in 1943, a trusted friend in high-policy-making circles came into my office and said:

> For God's sake, don't keep fighting the war on the basis of this agreement or we'll lose our shirts and turn communism loose around the world.

The next shock came when another friend told me that early in the fall of 1945 General Marshall had said to him:

> We have got to get Eisenhower out of Europe, because anyone who has had anything to do with Europe is a dead duck.

Then I learned of Gen. George Patton's bitter commentary on what was happening when he said, just before his untimely and tragic death:

> We fought the War of 1776 for independence. We fought the war of 1864 to free the slaves. We fought the war of 1917 to make the world safe for democracy. We fought this war to lose for humanity all that we had gained from the other three.

Then came the charges by Gen. Patrick J. Hurley, which I am certain no Senator would now undertake to refute, that—

> We began the war with the principles of the Atlantic Charter and democracy as our goal. * * * We finished the war in the Far East, furnishing lend-lease supplies and using all our reputation to undermine democracy and bolster imperialism and communism. The weakness of American foreign policy has backed us into two world wars. We had no part in shaping the conditions that brought about these two wars.
> There is a third world war in the making. In diplomacy today we are permitting ourselves to be sucked into a power block on the side of colonial imperialisms against Communist imperialism.

Then came Gen. Clare Chennault's warning, echoing these same charges:

> The United States is losing the Pacific war. * * * United States policy toward China is plunging us into a disastrous repetition of the errors that dragged us into World War II. I can hear the time fuze of the third world war sputtering in China, as it burns toward the final powder keg, and I cannot stand idly by without making every effort in my power to snuff it out.

On February 17, 1948, no less a figure than Mr. James Farley admitted to an audience at Colgate University the following reasons for these tragic developments when he said:

> I sincerely believe that many of the ills of the world today can be traced to the third and fourth terms, which brought a great mind, but one worn with the weight of years and the cares of state to the all-important conferences of Tehran and Yalta.
> There we had a worn leader dividing the world in a series of secret agreements which, having arisen from the Pandora's box of secret diplomacy are now plaguing the world's children with blood, death, and tears.

Then, Mr. President, the Hoover Commission task force, seeking the reorganization of our armed services issued a report which confirmed this whole tragic betrayal of American interests and principles, when it said, in part:

> Within slightly more than a score of years, at great cost in life and property, we have won two wars, only to lose the peace both times through lack of a clear and consistent national objective. * * * The bitter lesson does not yet seem to be fully learned—for the committee found that strategic plans, made without clear guidance of long-term peace aims, were based on assumptions that may or may not be true, that the military were planning now to fight the next war, if this tragedy should occur, without knowing what exactly we would be fighting for.

Mr. President, it is obvious that something has gone terribly wrong with our international programs and policies. It is no longer even an open secret that the situation we confront around the world has become too serious for anyone to dare to make political capital out of our predicament.

Our whole American foreign policy is crumbling around our heads, our most vital interests are being forsaken, our prestige is being irreparably undermined, our security is increasingly threatened, and our principles have been trampled under foot.

Since President Truman will not take either Congress or the American people into his confidence and tell us the tragic truth, it has now become our solemn duty to dig out the facts, weigh the evidence, and piece together the picture of what has happened. For myself, I believe it would be a criminal disservice to ignore the challenge of these times for one moment longer.

Therefore, Mr. President, insofar as I have been able to trace it, I want to lay before my colleagues and the American people the true picture of what has been going on during these past tragic, trying years, in the earnest hope that, having once got to the real roots of the wrongs that continue to be committed, we shall then be able to right them.

Mr. President, the American people were promised five basic principles upon which we could build a just and lasting peace, as a reward for their sacrifice and suffering during the war.

First, we were promised that Russia was a great democratic, peace-loving ally, upon whom we could absolutely count for continued genuine cooperation in the just solution of all the economic, social, political, and military problems of the postwar world.

Second, we were promised the realization of the peace aims contained in the principles of the Atlantic Charter, which we were solemnly assured Russia had signed and by which she would abide.

Third, we were promised that the system of sovereign and independent states and the whole system of international law upon which that system had been based would be preserved, and that these nations would also be permitted to join in solving the world's problems as sovereign and independent states.

Fourth, we were promised that the vanquished peoples—Germany, Japan, and Italy—would be rehabilitated and reincorporated into the family of peace-loving nations on the basis of equal access to the trade and raw materials of the world.

Fifth, we were promised that there would be preserved in all the nations stable elements of society with whom we could enter into long-term, social, economic, and diplomatic relations.

Mr. President, what has become of all these promises to the American people, the promises to the soldiers who fought in the fox holes, the promises to the ones who lost their limbs or who now are blind as a result of war wounds? What has become of all these promises, upon the realization of which the success of every single one of our international programs for economic recovery and for maintaining peace have been absolutely dependent?

What has become of the vicious propaganda that Russia was a democratic, peace-loving ally, whom we must not offend by even an honest and open discussion of our own vital interests, and without whose consent we must not dare to take a step even to safeguard those interests?

Here is how Elmer Davis explains what happened to this particular proposition, which he spent hundreds of millions of dollars peddling to the American people. On April 15, 1946, he said:

> A year or so ago, most of us supposed that Russian objectives were the same as ours; and extensive concessions were made to them on that hypothesis. We now seem to have been mistaken.

Of course, Mr. Davis' bland admission that our statesmen were the victims of a mistake in this matter is merely another example of the misleading and dangerous half-truth to which I have been referring. After thousands and thousands of our American soldiers and sailors have died while fighting for what they were told were our objectives, this man blandly states we were mistaken.

In the first place, the concessions that were made to Russia, could not possibly have been made on the hypothesis that Russia's aims were identical with our own. Not only were our representatives armed with the whole arsenal of historical facts concerning the viciousness and treacherous designs of Czarist and Communist foreign policy, with which to protect our interests against Russian guile, but they were also armed with the full knowledge that, contrary to the official propaganda, Russia never really signed the Atlantic Charter at all. Behind that half-truth lies the real fact that before Ivan Maisky would sign the Atlantic Charter document in London, on September 24, 1941, he read a long list of Russian exceptions and reservations to the principles of the Atlantic Charter, which constituted Russia's own unique Atlantic and Pacific Charter, all with the full knowledge and consent of our American representatives at that ceremony. But how many Americans knew it?

The question of what happened to the peace aims of the Atlantic Charter is of the utmost significance then, Mr. President, when these extensive concessions were made to Russia on the assumption that she had embraced its principles.

That only a tragedy could follow from policies based on this assumption, is evident from President Roosevelt's own attempt to explain away the embarrassing developments that followed. This is the reason why, on December 19, 1944, he jocularly stated that, so far as he ever knew, there never was a formal copy or document known as the Atlantic Charter in existence, and that, anyway, it was never more than a scrap of scribbled paper. Mr. President, I wonder how the boys who today are almost 95 percent disabled as the result of injuries or wounds they received during the war, feel now about President Roosevelt's statement on that date?

The truth is, Mr. President, that the mistake, to which both Mr. Davis and President Roosevelt referred, is a mistake which now endangers the future of the whole cause of human liberty. This mistake has destroyed the foundations upon which, alone, the success of all the international schemes to which we have been a party could possibly have been, or ever can be, realized.

In a word, the extensive concessions which were made to Russia on the basis of this mistaken assumption transformed the war both in Europe and in Asia from one of limited objectives into a world revolution, and threw onto the ash heap of lost civilizations the principles of the Atlantic Charter. After all, Mr. President, these principles were but the expression of the commonly accepted practices and objectives of civilized nations before the war broke out.

This means, Mr. President, that all the fine phrases about the guiding star of international cooperation by which we have set our course during and since the end of the war, are but more miserable half-truths which serve to cover up the fact that, instead of following that star, we have been plunged into the gathering darkness of a vicious struggle of power politics, which is slowly degenerating into a brutal struggle for sheer self-survival.

It is little wonder then to find that the third basic principle, without which we could not build a just and lasting peace, has also been torn out by the roots. I am speaking of the whole prewar system of sovereign and independent states and the body of international law upon which it was based. Today we find, instead, that those extensive concessions, which have been substituted as a new basis for international relations, are the outrageous and criminal betrayal of American principles which are contained in the secret conferences at Tehran, Yalta, and Potsdam. The tragic ignorance of what really happened or the utter hypocrisy of the continued peace-loving protestations on the part of those who have been responsible, is nowhere better revealed than in the terrifying contradiction contained in a speech by President Truman himself. On September 1, 1944, Mr. Truman made a campaign speech, as running mate of the late President Roosevelt, in which he told the American people that they had no cause to worry about the peace aims of the United States because, as he said, on the one hand:

> This peace was in process many months ago when two men met in mid-Atlantic and drew up a charter, a set of principles for peace, that have been cited and used as guides by both Democrats and Republicans alike ever since they were first set forth.

Then Mr. Truman went on to assure us that, on the other hand:

> This peace was being made at Casablanca, at Moscow, at Quebec, at Cairo, at Tehran. * * * It is a continuing process already years under way, still years in prospect.

The record proves that no man ever uttered a more well-intentioned yet absurd contradiction, for the whole sordid series of secret agreements to which President Truman referred has torn the world in two, turned Russia loose across eastern Europe and western Asia, paralyzed European and Asiatic economies, and placed us in the suicidal position, since 1933, of having built up both jaws of the military monster which is continuing to crush both Europe and Asia between them.

This mistake has resulted in our actually legalizing Russia's aggression by continuing to honor these outrageous secret agreements of Tehran, Yalta, and Potsdam. What is more, we now find that we have actually financed Russian aggression over these years. First, we know that billions of dollars worth of lend-lease goods we gave to Russia, with no strings attached, were not used to fight either Germany or Japan, but were used, and continue to be used, to crush all opposition within the so-called liberated countries which we turned over to Russia's tender ministrations in the series of secret conferences.

Then we continued to finance and support Russian aggression both in Europe and Asia by entering into the insane reparations agreements, which gave Russia the right to loot and rape Manchuria, and which have resulted in the withdrawal from Central Europe of at least $14,000,000,000 in loot, all at the subsequent expense of the American taxpayer.

Moreover, we entered into international programs such as UNRRA, knowing all the time that these resources could not help but further feed Russia's gluttonous, expansionist appetite. Then we seem to have confounded the confusion even more by actually ratifying, on the United States Senate floor, treaties with Axis countries, which in effect have forced us to continue to pay indemnities and reparations indirectly to Russia. What is more, the very act of ratification has become a further embarrassment, for, by condemning such a nation as Italy to permanent miserable substandards of living, we have placed an additional and continuing burden on the American taxpayer, which cannot be lifted except we change the treaty obligations, an act which leaves us wide open to charges by the Russian signatories of violating international law.

In the process, Mr. President, every Member of this Senate body can recall how we were consistently urged to recognize Russia's right to surround herself with friendly nations, all during the time when this whole system of sovereign and independent states, and the whole body of international law upon which it was based, were being ruthlessly repudiated in a series of as savage and cruel acts of aggression as the pages of history have ever recorded.

Meanwhile, we have learned to our sorrow that as a result of this shameful division of the world, we have left Russia in possession of the maximum of the raw materials and a minimum of the population of Europe and Asia, while we have been burdened with the task of supporting the permanently bankrupt economies of western Europe and eastern Asia with a minimum of the raw materials and a maximum of the population that has been caught between Russia and ourselves. In undertaking to fulfill this impossible task, we have finally been forced to accept the fact that Russia has been bent on world domination all the time, and that contrary to the official propaganda line, she is determined to undermine our interests, defeat our objectives all over the earth, and destroy the United States in the process.

Yet, Mr. President, when we look at what we have been accomplishing by our foreign policies on this side of the iron curtain, the picture is just as tragic. For instance, by making these mistaken extensive concessions and by following the anti-American political propaganda line which sought to justify them, our American statesmen have carried out a foreign policy on this side of the iron curtain which has also played directly into the hands of Russia's interests and further undermined the basic principles for which this Nation stands.

In the first place, Mr. President, we have repudiated the promise that the vanquished nations would be re-incorporated into the family of nations on the basis of a just and lasting peace. Instead, we have been carrying out the insane commitments entered into at Potsdam, which call for the destruction of the German speaking peoples, and for the destruction of the industrial potential upon which the people, not only of Germany, but of the whole of Europe are absolutely dependent even for a minimum standard of living. We are spending a billion dollars a year, to carry out this senseless process of destruction, even while the President is calling for an additional $1,000,000,000 to help raise the standards of living of industrially underdeveloped peoples in other nations which are dependent on the industrial potential which we are destroying.

This whole program is playing directly into the hands of the Communists, destroying the economic, social, political, and military stability of the European nations, uprooting the whole principle of private property which is protected under the Hague Convention, and paving the way for the collapse of our vital interests in Europe, just as they are collapsing as a result of identical policies in the Far East.

What is more, by following out this pro-Communist policy we are subsidizing other European nations which are determined to use our resources to secure their own individual and selfish interests, no matter what effect such action may ultimately have either on their neighbors or on the United States itself. This explains what has happened to the promise to reincorporate the vanquished peoples into the family of nations.

In the second place, we now discover that we have also continued to play into Communist hands on this side of the iron curtain by following the political division of the world, resulting from the repudiation of the Atlantic Charter and the substitution of the secret agreements which for so long have forced us to permit Russia to carry on her own game of power politics with impunity. I am referring to the fact that following the Tehran Conference the ideological basis of the war, between the Fascist and democratic powers, was transformed into a world revolution between the "democrats" who faithfully followed the Russian line, and the "Fascists," who opposed her.

By following this line—and, oh, how important this is—by following this line the United States continued to attack nations on this side of the iron curtain, such as Switzerland, Sweden, Spain, Portugal, the Argentine, and others, as non-peace-loving nations, and we continued to subject them to economic and diplomatic insults all patterned after the Moscow line. This explains what has happened to the stable elements of society which were to be assured continuing control of their own destinies.

Third, we also fell into the trap, for Communist propagandists to exploit, when we allied ourselves with the Western Powers who were determined to reimpose their system of colonial exploitation over the weaker peoples of the African and Asiatic worlds. Now we know that we have been financing Dutch imperialism, French imperialism, British imperialism, and all the other imperial systems, which have been the curse of so many millions of helpless and weaker peoples around the world. This holds true even of the policies we have followed toward South America.

And so to date, Mr. President, our foreign policy, which has been subsidized by the American people and paid for by the blood of America's youth, has been selling peoples into the slavery of economic and political systems all over the world.

Mr. President, it now begins to appear that we are the first nation in history that has ever become so pathological as to launch on such a cosmic crusade as we now find ourselves in, pouring out our treasure and our blood in two tragic world wars in one generation, only to end up by underwriting a permanently bankrupt imperialist venture, which was doomed at the start.

What other nation in history has made such tremendous sacrifices as have followed these two world wars, only to end up by deliberately subsidizing the very forces of greed, exploitation and tyranny which produced them?

Can it be that we have finally embarked on the fatal course, against which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] so strenuously warned us over 20 years ago, when he wrote:

> A stream can rise no higher than its source. The source of internationalism is and must be nationalism, because the latter is the inevitable entity upon which the former must build.

Destroy the latter and the former immediately and automatically becomes anomalous.

Just as the home is the basis, sine qua non, of the nation, so in turn, is the nation the basis of world cooperation. The nationalist puts first things first. The internationalists puts first things last.

Thus, while nationalism readily cooperates on its own volition, this latter being the crux of independence, with humanitarian enterprises * * * invoked by the League of Nations or under any other trans-oceanic auspices, it refuses to forget that America has separate and different standards of life and government, and it refuses either to merge these advantages in a general averaging of the standards of other lands, or to expose them by any untoward degree, to the mandate of massed foreign pressure or duress.

That is what they always say, Mr. President, when they find they have gone wrong. Their excuse is that we did not give them enough, or that we gave it to them too late. The excuse they now have is that the American people did not do enough.

The Senator from Michigan went on to utter these prophetic words concerning this great American tradition, which we now seem to have forsaken:

It is a rugged trail of hard-bought freedom. No toll road this—with unwelcome and unbidden mercenaries making alien levies on our liberties and rights.

Reckless adventurers with naught to cherish and naught to lose—soldiers of doubtful political fortune for whom speculation is a trade—may leave this high road for the bypaths and the detours, and the proscribed entanglements of international experiment. High-purposed theorists, scorning the admonitions of yesterday, may clothe their call to other roads in all the habiliments of an evangelical crusade.

But this independent Nation of justly proud Americans will meddle with such vagary, only at its peril.

Mr. President, when a nation forsakes its own traditions and turns over the reins of its destiny to those whose internationalism becomes so pathological as to ignore, or desert, or to betray our own primary national interests and principles, it is time that once more we recalled those words of Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, who said:

The peril of this Nation is not in any foreign foe. We, the people, are its power, its peril, and its hope.

Mr. President, it is time the American people were fully aroused to the stark tragedy that is now stalking them. While we have been able thus far to weather the tremendous sacrifices that have been imposed upon us during and since the end of the war, these sacrifices have only advanced the cause of imperialist exploitation on both sides of the iron curtain. We have been following a pattern of international cooperation that has not advanced a single cause or principle which is so vital to our own future strength and security.

Instead, the tragic consequences of these sacrifices are rapidly becoming suicidal liabilities.

Would it not be tragic, Mr. President, if now, knowing these things to be true, we should be panicked, or driven, or blindly led to underwrite a permanent extension of this same brand of suicidal internationalism?

Certainly there cannot any longer be doubt of where we are heading. To date, we have been pouring out billions of dollars to carry out these basic programs abroad. Where has all this led us?

Mr. President, it has led us even deeper into the internal affairs of the other nations of the earth, and into ever-heavier financial and economic commitments and controls at home.

Now, we are told that the reason for our present dilemma is that these sacrifices have not been extensive enough, that we did not aid enough countries, and were too stingy in what aid we have given. So that now, Mr. President, we are advised that even at the end of the 4-year program, the Marshall plan cannot possibly get these nations back on their feet, but that we had better plan now for a 10-year program, which, including the additional costs of other incidentals, will cost the American taxpayer from $150,000,000,000 to $200,000,000,000 before it is over.

For instance, we are told that the additional costs will be necessary to put the North Atlantic Alliance into effect, which will involve a revival of military lend-lease, all of which will also be dependent upon implementation of the President's bold, new program for raising the standards of living of the whole world.

Furthermore, we are told that because of the strains on our own domestic economy we must now put the Government into the steel business, extend its functions ever deeper into our economic and social life, continue Government powers of allocation and controls over scarce materials, and submit to a tremendous tax increase to support the whole domestic and foreign program.

In addition, we are headed into increased involvement in the economic affairs of other nations to such an extent that this kind of a program cannot possibly be successful without the destruction, not only of our own economic freedom, but of our whole standard of living.

Nowhere has this picture been more clearly drawn than in the report, Independent Business—Its Struggle for Survival, Senate Document No. 7, in which the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] states:

This policy has already led to the imposition of both mandatory and voluntary controls over many segments of our economy, because of the grave shortages that have already developed as a result of the unprecedented foreign commitments already entered into by this Government.

The dangers of an extension of this policy to free enterprise are increasingly apparent. In proportion as we become involved in international commitments for political purposes, and as we seek to meet those commitments by further involvement, and through increased dependence upon adherence to a wider range of international commodity agreements, the greater will become the necessity for fitting our own economy into this new international pattern of Government-controlled cartel allocation of raw materials and markets.

As we continue to depend on export controls and domestic allocation of scarce materials to meet these commitments we will be compelled by self-interest to force more investments into development of foreign sources of production and supply of these same materials upon which our own economic health depends.

Mr. President, the economic lunacy that underlies the administration programs and propaganda is very simply to be described.

On the one hand, we emerged from the war with a $250,000,000,000 debt which we must finance in order to maintain our own solvency.

In order to carry this burden and increase the production which is so necessary to keep our economy functioning, we, of necessity, moved into a higher price level following the end of the OPA, a price structure which reflects the tremendous inflationary impact of the war and the huge national debt it had incurred.

In order to keep this level of production at this level of 69 percent above 1929, this Government has embarked upon a subsidy program that reaches out into every area of our social and economic life. Shipping, aviation, post offices and post roads, Federal power projects, irrigation and flood control, rural electrification, the price-support program for agriculture, and many other fields.

This means that the American people are spending billions of dollars to keep our economy operating on a price-level unit-production basis, which will enable us to expand our own facilities, develop new sources of raw materials, provide an adequate income for consumption of the goods produced, leave sufficient profit margins to carry business along, and pay for our huge international programs which are all absolutely dependent upon the present high production price and income level of this country, which this Government is trying to protect.

On the other hand, this Government is spending billions of dollars in foreign programs, raising raw-material production and increasing productive capacities among those nations which are increasingly dependent upon American markets for their finished goods or raw-material surplus outlets. Yet the administration insists that a reciprocal-trade program, which cuts tariffs below the American production-cost level, is an absolute essential for the success of their foreign programs.

Of course this means, Mr. President, that the American people, who are absolutely dependent upon our ability to protect the American economy and price structure for their own economic security, are forced to pour our billions of dollars abroad to develop the very competitive forces which this administration insists must be able to find an outlet for their goods in the American market, under trade agreements which undermine the whole American cost-of-production and price structure.

In other words, we are subsidizing our own American economy to keep our price structure sound, and at the same time subsidizing foreign competition, which the Administration insists must have the right to come in and undermine the American standard of living. It simply does not make sense.

Mr. President, aside from the inevitability of its bringing about our own economic and financial collapse, this program is also guaranteed to make the necessity for American subsidy abroad a permanent burden, because it is based on the reimposition of colonial exploitation in those areas of the world which the President insists we must spend billions of dollars out of the American taxpayers pockets to industrialize and develop. How, Mr. President, can these nations ever expect to be able to get back on their own feet, or even improve their own industrial equipment, when we subsidize an economic policy which so exploits them that they can never earn their own way out of the predicament they are in?

Mr. President, such economic insanity cannot possibly lead anywhere except where it has already led us, even deeper into the internal affairs of other nations, at the expense of the American people.

What is more, Mr. President, this whole policy will continue to lead us ever deeper into a permanent war-economy status that will destroy constitutional representative government in this country, and substitute, instead, a Government by executive order implemented by legislative appropriations.

In a recent exhaustive study of the foreign affairs powers that are necessary to carry out this kind of an international program, Professors McDougal and Lans, writing in the Yale Law Review, in 1945 observed:

> It is becoming increasingly difficult to divide effective control over foreign and domestic affairs if we are to have more prosperity and less depression, or to divide effective control over war and peace if we are to have less war and more peace.

Never were truer words spoken.

The tragedy is, however, Mr. President, that, contrary to the propaganda that such a policy is leading to more prosperity and more peace, it is leading us instead into a planned-scarcity depression and a war, the consequences of which no man dares to predict, other than that it will doom our form of Government and our way of life for generations to come.

This means also, Mr. President, that we are rapidly losing not only our own economic and social freedom, but that we are undermining the safeguards of the constitutional guarantees of our personal liberty under law.

It is frightening to learn that this whole legal question regarding the basis of our international relations has confused our own Supreme Court to such an extent that when Mr. William Logan, of New York, argued against the legality of the international tribunal that tried the Japanese War Crimes cases, no less a person than Mr. Justice Frankfurter admitted that as a result of the legal confusion which underlies out international programs and policies, even the Supreme Court was unable to straighten the matter out.

Mr. Frankfurter said to Mr. Logan, who had apologized for his own inability to state his arguments more clearly:

> The trouble is not with your clarity but with your problem. * * * Something may be illegal, and still be international and so be something over which this Court has no jurisdiction.

It is even more disconcerting to find that in its own brief prepared on this case the United States Government states:

> Once it is suggested that American courts may review the judgments of an International Court or pass upon the actions of an international authority's agents, most unhappy consequences can be anticipated in the development of international affairs.

Mr. President, before we permit this whole international program to get completely out of hand, by underwriting a permanent extension of its present legal and economic absurdities, it is time we stopped and reconsidered the lessons of our whole history as a free and sovereign people.

If we are not permanently to embrace an international program which will lead us down the road to destruction by taking us ever deeper into economic, military, and political intervention all over the world, we must retrace our steps out of the international morass into which we have plunged, by following once more the guiding star of our traditional American principles.

Mr. President, America was carved out of the remnants of five ancient empires, the British, the French, the Spanish, the Dutch, and the Russian. From its inception, America was dedicated as a sanctuary for the politically and spiritually oppressed who might reach our shores in their search for liberty and freedom from exploitation and oppression. Our Nation was founded on the belief that the external relations of a people ought always to reflect the internal economic, social, and political needs and the sovereign will of the people themselves.

This is the reason why Washington and Jefferson sought to guard us against embroilment in the internal quarrels of the nations of the Old World, and to preserve our constitutional government "as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad."

Throughout our history as a free and sovereign people, we have stood by this conviction that under no circumstances has any nation any right to exploit weaker and helpless peoples either within or outside of its borders.

If we read the Declaration of Independence again, we shall see that the gravest concern of our founding fathers was not that we should ever approve indirect support of exploitation of weaker peoples by stronger nations, but, instead, their primary concern was to create on these shores a form of government which would forever preserve the American people from the brutal exploitation of their own resources, freedoms, and persons by their own Government.

How, then, does the President's bold new program appear in the light of the foregoing facts?

Again we find the American people being made the victims of a misleading and dangerous half-truth, which, if accepted, will only take us farther down the road of exploitation, bankruptcy, and ruin.

Mr. President, in the midst of all the confusion that prevails we are indeed fortunate to be able to contrast clearly the difference between a genuine American program for international cooperation and the pathological internationalism we are now being asked to perpetuate. Indeed, I have in my hand a copy of a communication which reveals the nature of this contradiction down to its very roots. I refer to a communication sent to the late President Roosevelt by Gen. Patrick J. Hurley, from Chungking, China, on September 17, 1944. This communication contains the American plan for international cooperation which was outlined to President Roosevelt by General Hurley in a report of December 21, 1943, which I now wish to read into the RECORD.

Has any Senator on this floor ever seen this correspondence between General Hurley and the late President Roosevelt? Has it been published in any newspapers? General Hurley was sent to China by President Franklin D. Roosevelt. He was sent there at the expense of the American taxpayers. I say that even the members of the Foreign Relations Committee have not seen the correspondence between Gen. Patrick Hurley on the one hand and the late President Roosevelt on the other.

This is what General Hurley wrote to the President on the 21st of December 1943, after he had been in China at the request of the President:

> It is the purpose of the United States to sustain Iran as a free, independent nation and to afford the Iranian people an opportunity to enjoy the rights of man as set forth in the Constitution of the United States and to participate in the fulfillment of the principles of the Atlantic Charter.
> The policy of the United States toward Iran, therefore, is to assist in the creation in Iran of a government based upon the consent of the governed and of a system of free enterprise which will enable that nation to develop its resources prin.arily for the benefit of its own people. Iranian resources are adequate to sustain a program to help Iran to help herself. By this program of self-government and well-directed self-help Iran can achieve for herself the fulfillment of the principles of justice, freedom of conscience, freedom of the press, freedom of speech, freedom from want, equality of opportunity, and to a degree freedom from fear.

In all the history of America, Mr. President, no one has ever expressed anything more clearly than did that great patriot, Patrick J. Hurley, in his letter to the late President. General Hurley continued:

> To accomplish the above the United States will furnish upon invitation of the Iranian Government, experts and advisers in any or all of the fields of government. All experts and advisers furnished to Iran by the United States will be paid—

By whom? By the American taxpayers? No, Mr. President, General

Hurley said, "Let the Iranians pay for the experts sent to their country to help Iran." General Hurley said they—will be paid by the Iranian Government and implemented in their operations by authority of Iranian law, and will not be a financial responsibility of the American taxpayer. The United States will not ask or receive any special privileges in return for these services.

American advisers will be fully indoctrinated in the policy of our own Government toward Iran and shall make regular progress reports to our State Department. This indoctrination and requirement of reporting will provide a vital element of coordination which is essential to direction of our policy and protection of our interests.

Modern history of this country shows it to have been dominated by a powerful and greedy minority. The people have also been subjected to foreign exploitation and monopoly. In extending American assistance to the building of an improved society in Iran there must be imposed a sufficient degree of supervision and control over free enterprise and personal aggression to protect the unorganized and inarticulate majority from foreign and domestic monopoly and oppression.

Mr. President, here we come to the difference in theory between those who are following President Truman in what he said in his inaugural address and some of us who believe that when we go into a foreign country we should not go there to exploit it, but should go there to help the common people of that country. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley set a pattern for us in America to follow, and in a few minutes Senators will find out what became of that pattern set for the American people by that great general. General Hurley said:

Inauguration in Iran of the American pattern of self-government and free enterprise will be an assurance that proceeds from development of Iranian resources will be directed substantially to the building of schools, hospitals, sanitary systems, transportation and communication systems, irrigation systems, and improvement of all facilities contributing to the health, happiness and general welfare of the Iranian people.

This plan of nation building may be improved through our experience in Iran and may become the criterion for the relations of the United States toward all the nations which are now suffering from the evils of greedy minorities, monopolies, aggression, and imperialism.

Where can there be found a finer expression than that contained in the letter by Gen. Patrick Hurley to the late President Franklin Delano Roosevelt? General Hurley continued:

The American people, single-mindedly devoted to independence and liberty, are fighting today not to have the imperialisms of other nations nor to create an imperialism of our own but rather to bestow upon the world the benevolent principles of the Atlantic Charter and the four freedoms.

How could General Hurley have expressed himself more clearly? He said that the American taxpayer is contributing and the American soldier is fighting, not to keep some discredited king on a tottering throne, but for the common people.

The whole plan is being predicated on your desire—to raise the standard of living in other nations as a means of sustaining our own standard of living. The standard of living in other nations cannot be substantially or permanently raised by lend-lease or doles. The American taxpayers would not be able to pay for a continuance of relief for the world on a lend-lease basis. Therefore, as I understood you, our purpose was, as stated above, to establish free governments and free enterprise and to lend expert advice and leadership in developing the resources and the commerce and building up generally the industry of each of the less-favored nations so that the citizens, through their own efforts, could raise their own standard of living.

That is on President Roosevelt's desire—

President Truman said in his inaugural address that we are going to extend our activities all over the world, and what he proposes to do will be at the expense of the American taxpayers, and he asked for a great sum of money for a single year, to begin the work. Yet we are tearing down German industry, even tearing down the German fertilizer plants, thus depriving German farmers of the opportunity to obtain enough fertilizer, and their crops are becoming poorer all the time. The American taxpayers are paying more and more for it all.

The American agents or experts were to be paid by the nations in which they served and would not be a burden on the American taxpayer. All of this is in conflict with the opinions of those who believe that the American taxpayers can become the Santa Claus to the whole world, and is also in conflict with the opinions of all who favor imperialism, monopoly, and exploitation.

Then General Hurley revealed that he had received President Roosevelt's endorsement of this plan when he recalled that—

On March 25, 1944, I received a letter from you which is, in full, as follows:

MARCH 25, 1944.

Maj. Gen. PATRICK J. HURLEY,
Shoreham Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR PAT: Your letter of December 21, 1943, concerning Iran contains suggestions of very great interest. I am thrilled with the idea of using our efforts in Iran as an example of what can be done by an unselfish American policy. If we can get the right kind of American experts who will remain loyal to their ideals I feel certain that our policy of aiding Iran will succeed.

You are right that the distribution of lend-lease supplies throughout the Middle East should be taken over by our own people, and I have let the Secretary of State know my views in this matter.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

General Hurley went on to say:

This letter is excellent. It indicates that you approved and desired to make effective the plan for Iran.

I was permitted also to read in the State Department your memoranda of January 12, 1944, addressed to the Secretary of State, with which you transmitted my report. You expressed to the Secretary your desire to use Iran as an example of what we could do with an enlightened, unselfish American policy. You told the Secretary, as I recall it, that you would like to have a try at making this policy effective in Iran as Iran appeared to present the most difficult situation in the Middle East at that time. You wished to make Iran the testing ground for an American policy based on the principles stated in the Atlantic Charter. You very pointedly stated that the essence of your plan was in the fact that it offered assistance to the so-called less-favored nations in their economic difficulties without creating a burden on the American taxpayer.

On March 2, 1944, I received a very favorable and understanding letter from the Acting Secretary of State, Edward R. Stettinius, copy attached, in which he enumerates the recommendations made by me, in reference to Iran, which had been made effective.

I am justified in assuming that the program for Iran had your approval and the approval of the Secretary of State.

Mr. President, I want at this time to refer to a letter written on April 9, 1945, to the Secretary of War by Secretary of State Stettinius, to prove the assertion of General Hurley that he had also been assured by the State Department that it was putting this policy into effect:

APRIL 9, 1945.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: During 1943 and 1944 the War Department was good enough to make available to the Department of State the services of Maj. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley for important and urgent diplomatic negotiations in the Middle East. His duties in the Middle East having been concluded, I wish to express the warm appreciation of this Department for his outstanding services and to report to you, for the record, a statement of his accomplishments.

This is what Stettinius thought of General Hurley at that time:

Under date of May 13, 1943, General Hurley made a report on Iran to the President, at the conclusion of which he made four specific recommendations: (1) that Iran be assured of American insistence that the principles of the Atlantic Charter do in fact apply to Iran; (2) that Iran be permitted to join the United Nations in the declaration of war against the Axis; (3) that the American and British Legations be raised immediately to the status of embassies; and (4) that American and British Ambassadors who are compatible to each other and are able to understand and promote British-American cooperation in Iran be appointed. All four of these recommendations were accomplished. Subsequently General Hurley was instrumental in having brought before the Tehran conference what is now known as the declaration regarding Iran. The various forms of this declaration which had been considered previously were revised under General Hurley's insistence and a reaffirmation of the principles of the Atlantic Charter inserted for the first time. General Hurley played the leading part in obtaining the adoption and signature of this declaration by President Roosevelt, Marshal Stalin, and Prime Minister Churchill. The declaration has been of material service to the American Government and an inspiration to all of the peoples of the Middle East.

In addition to the foregoing, General Hurley outlined a general plan for our relations not only with Iran but with other Middle East nations, including a recommendation in regard to the administration and distribution of lend-lease supplies throughout the Middle East. Later, on December 21, 1943, he rendered another report on Iran which the President acknowledged in a letter dated March 25, 1944, a copy of which is attached hereto. The plan outlined by General Hurley in his report of December 21, 1943, is being implemented by this Department.

General Hurley also made an investigation of the oil situation in Saudi Arabia and made an intensive and incisive report on that situation.

General Hurley rendered services of a highly meritorious character, with far-reaching effect on the policies of this Government. I am happy to place on record this evidence of the Department's regard for his achievements while serving in the Middle East in the capacity of special representative of the President with the rank of ambassador.

With best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

E. R. STETTINIUS, Jr.

I want every Senator to remember that letter, written by the then Secretary of State.

Mr. President, now follows a grim picture of just how this genuine American plan for international cooperation and every hope of salvaging the principles of the Atlantic Charter were undermined. I want now to read this story into the record in order to help the American people understand just where, when, and how the roots of our present predicament were planted.

I am continuing to quote from General Hurley's Chungking communication to the President:

At this point I might state that I have been told that the deterioration of America's position in Iran is due, in large measure, to the fact that you did not call on the Shah after he visited you while you were in Iran. This, in my opinion, is not true. The deterioration in America's position in Iran is due to more deep-seated causes.

Let me examine for you what I believe to be the more deep-seated reasons for the deterioration of America's prestige in all of the Middle East.

Why have the Communists won in that area? Why have the Communists won in China?

They have won because Pat Hurley's advice was not followed. They won, for one reason, because after Roosevelt advised that Mr. Hurley's advice be followed, it was not follow d. There is another reason which I shall point out in a moment.

Mr. President, let us examine briefly what Mr. Hurley considers to be the deep-seated reasons for the deterioration of America's prestige in all of the Middle East. I read further from his letter:

I was shown a memorandum in the State Department which was written by Mr. Rostov and was initialed by Assistant Secretary Dean Acheson and others. This memoranda condemned the Iranian plan and referred to it as "messianic global-baloney."

There we find this man Dean Acheson again, Mr. President. I am very proud of the fact that I voted against confirmation of his nomination when it was before the Senate. Let those on this side of the aisle who voted for the confirmation of his nomination take the consequences.

I continue to read from Mr. Hurley's letter:

My report which you sent to the State Department was circulated in other departments of the Government. It carried with it the "messianic global-baloney" memoranda and was also verbally attacked by men in the State Department to such an extent that the report was discredited. It finally reached the press through a keyhole columnist in a discreditable form. So the basic work of destroying your Iranian plan was accomplished in Washington.

Those who opposed the Iranian plan in Washington have also expressed the same opinion about the Atlantic Charter that they have expressed about the Iranian plan. They are especially opposed to articles 3 and 4 of the Atlantic Charter which are, in full, as follows:

"3. They respect the rights of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live—and they wish to see sovereign rights and self-government restored to those who have been forcibly deprived of them.

"4. They will endeavor with due respect for their existing obligation to further the enjoyment of all states, great and small, victor and vanquished, of access on equal terms to the trade and to the raw materials of the world which are needed for their economic prosperity."

These are men in the State Department who are upholding imperialism, monopoly, and exploitation as opposed to the principles stated in the Atlantic Charter. That is one of the deep-seated reasons for the failure of the Iranian plan.

We come now to consider the experts. You very wisely pointed out, in your letter to me of March 25, 1944, that:

"If we can get the right kind of American experts who will remain loyal to their ideals I feel certain our policy of aiding Iran will succeed."

Here you put your fingers on the second deep-seated cause for the failure of the Iranian plan.

Mr. President, I hope all Senators clearly understand this matter. The Members of the Senate now on the floor should put themselves in the place of the Iranian people at that time. After the Tehran Conference, hundreds of thousands of them were awaiting action by the American experts.

I read further from Mr. Hurley's letter:

After the Tehran Conference, the Iranians awaited action by the American experts. Some of the so-called experts had already been appointed. The American experts in Iran were, at best, faced by a very difficult situation. Britain and Russia had occupied the country and had hired or commandeered nearly all the transportation facilities. They had already consumed a considerable portion of Iranian food. Our General Connolly was operating the Iranian railroad for the purpose of transporting supplies to Russia. American so-called experts were put in charge of food rationing and finance; military reorganization; national and municipal police reorganization and other internal affairs for the reorganization and development of Iran.

Significantly, Mr. President, all those foreigners were brought into Iran to conduct the affairs of the people of Iran for them, instead of letting the people of Iran control their own affairs, and those experts and other foreigners were brought there at the expense of the American taxpayers. I challenge the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate to show any activity on its part at that time to point out the evils and errors in that situation. Not one speech on that subject was made on the floor of the Senate by the Republicans. So it is no wonder that the American people had no confidence in the Republican Party as constituted at the time of the last election. Of course, the people had no confidence in the Republican Party, and they should not have had any confidence in it, Mr. President. It has been said that we had a bipartisan foreign policy. A bipartisan policy to do what? It was a policy to ruin every poor man in every one of the poor countries which was relying upon the United States, as its friend, for help. But the Senate Foreign Relations Committee sat idly by and watched the exploitation go on.

I read further from Mr. Hurley's letter:

The conduct of the occupying nations had deprived Iran of transportation and food to a great extent. The occupying nations had required Iran to issue large amounts of currency which, together with the shortage of transportation and supplies, brought about inflation. The occupying nations publicly condemned the Iranian Government, which they had made impotent, for not taking stronger action. The occupying nations finally condemned the American experts or agents for not bringing order out of the chaos which the occupying nations had created. They have now succeeded in getting the Iranian Government to join them in condemnation of the American agents. In short, Mr. President, America has been made the goat. I am advised that the Shah said recently, during the course of a conference with the British Chargé d'Affaires, that he would be happy if all the so-called American experts would go home. We should frankly face the fact that to a great extent this position, if taken by the Shah, is justified.

Minister Dreyfus was withdrawn by you so that you could appoint a man capable of coordinating and leading the American agencies in Iran. There was great delay in appointing an Ambassador and a commercial attaché. The man who has recently been appointed Ambassador is unquestionably a splendid gentleman. He was in Iceland before being made Ambassador to Iran. He is not familiar with the situation in Iran. His previous experience would not justify anyone in believing that he is capable of handling the most difficult situation in the Middle East. He does not seem to understand your policy, nor does he show any evidence of being able to make it effective.

Dr. Millspaugh, the finance expert, is able and honest but has not been getting along very well. He has not had the support of the other American agencies in Iran.

Mr. President, in the United States the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force cannot get along together very well. Likewise in Iran the Americans who were sent there by the United States have even been quarreling among themselves, so, of course, they do not get very far in the right direction under those circumstances.

Mr. Hurley continues as follows:

The Iranians, the British, and the Russians and our own State Department believe that Dr. Millspaugh has failed. I am not willing to go that far in his case. I think his trouble is that he has not had the proper direction or support.

General Connolly, the American military commander, has certainly been efficient. He has achieved outstanding results in getting supplies to Russia. That was his mission.

Most of the other so-called American experts in Iran are washouts. Some of them have taken no action whatever. There is neither unification nor harmony among them. There has been no enlightened effort to coordinate American experts in Iran. The experts, sent to Iran, have not been indoctrinated in the fundamental principles of the policy which you have adopted.

Instead of creating a set-up in Iran which would serve as criterion for America's policy not only in Iran but in all the so-called less-favored nations, the American effort in Iran has become a symbol of American inaction, incompetence, and failure.

Mr. President, it is no wonder that the Communists won in China.

I read further from the letter:

This is certainly not your fault nor is it the fault of the Secretary of State. Both of you have, in my opinion, been faithful to the principles of the Atlantic Charter and have reiterated many times the rights of small nations to free government, free enterprise, and the development of their own resources for the purpose of raising their own standard of living.

The deterioration of America's position in Iran and in the entire Middle East and the debacle of the principles of the Atlantic Charter was initiated in Washington. The element in the State Department that made plans for the defeat of your Iranian policy justifies the sale of lend-lease goods by the United Kingdom Commercial Corp. This corporation is a government-owned institution created for the purpose of establishing a trade monopoly in Iran. This corporation is the deep-seated basic reason for the failure of your plan for Iran. Those in the State Department who are opposed to the principles of the Atlantic Charter are cooperating in furnishing lend-lease goods to the United Kingdom Commercial Corp. and its subsidiaries for the purpose of sustaining imperialism, monopoly, and exploitation. These same people wish to prevent the building of free governments and free enterprise and the development of the resources of Iran and other Middle East nations for the purpose of raising the standard of living of the people within the Middle East nations. They are succeeding in subjecting all the peoples of the Middle East and Africa to the principles of imperialism, monopoly, and exploitation. The result of all this is that the United States, having occupied the highest position in the estimation of the Iranian officials and people, now occupy the lowest position of any of the powers represented there.

While I have written to you and spoken to you personally about the United Kingdom Commercial Corp. I am not certain that I have been able to impress upon your mind a true picture of what that corporation is doing. Let me give you here a brief outline of one of the chief reasons for the failure of your Iranian plan.

The United Kingdom Commercial Corp., with the use of American lend-lease goods, is establishing a trade monopoly in Iran. While in Iran I expressed my opposition to the use of American lend-lease goods for this purpose and wrote you suggesting that lend-lease supplies in the categories that were being sold should be stopped or at least the United Kingdom Commercial Corp. should be required to reimburse America for the lend-lease goods which it is selling for purposes that have no connection with the war but have the sole purpose of establishing a monopoly.

Your Minister, Dean James Landis, has told me that, in recognition of my demands, the United Kingdom Commercial Corp. has deposited $15,000,000 in some sort of a suspense account in London which is to be applied on the payment of lend-lease goods which it has sold. In recognition of the principle which I advocated the lend-lease goods are to be paid for as soon as an accounting has been made. While this does acknowledge the principle, the action would not be satisfactory to me if I were representing the United States. In the first place, the amount is not a drop in the bucket compared with the value of lend-lease goods which have been sold by the United Kingdom Commercial Corp. and its subsidiaries. In the second place, even the $15,000,000 will not, in my opinion, be applied. There seems to be a determined effort not to pay the United States for any lend-lease goods whether they are used for war purposes or sold by a corporation for the purpose of establishing a monopoly.

Article 1 of the Atlantic Charter is as follows:

"1. Their countries seek no aggrandizement, territorial or other."

Because of the demands made on your time, I do not believe that you have ever fully realized that the money of the American taxpayer is being used in the name of democracy and in the name of the Atlantic Charter to establish an international trade monopoly that has for its purpose the exploitation of the people of the weaker nations throughout the Middle East, Africa, and elsewhere.

I might say, Mr. President, I do not believe a single Senator knew this corporation was selling lend-lease goods which they got for nothing from the United States. I do not believe there is a Senator upon the floor, including any member of the Foreign Relations Committee, who knows the extent of the corporation's operations.

The letter continues:

So that you may have a sketch of the gigantic operations of this monopoly, which we are supporting through lend-lease, I submit here a rough outline of the set-up of the United Kingdom Commercial Corp. and its subsidiaries.

A. The United Kingdom Commercial Corp. is a Government corporation having its headquarters in London. Its subsidiary corporations operate in each of the following nations under the name indicated:

1. UKCC (Egypt) Ltd.
2. UKCC (Libia).
3. UKCC (Sudan) Ltd.
4. East Africa.
5. UKCC (Ethiopia) Ltd.
6. UKCC (Eritrea) Ltd.
7. UKCC (Palestine) Ltd.
8. UKCC (Syria & Lebanon) Ltd.
9. UKCC (Iraq) Ltd.
10. UKCC (Persia) Ltd.
11. UKCC (East Africa) Ltd.
12. UKCC (Algiers) Ltd.
13. UKCC (Turkey) Ltd.

(In addition there are branch offices at Cyprus, Aden, and Jibuti.)

B. Global subsidiary:

14. United States.
15. India.
16. Argentine.
17. Portugal.

Mr. Hurley then expresses the viewpoint, I believe, of those typical, patriotic Americans who willingly sent their sons to fight for our country. It cannot possibly be better expressed than the way it is expressed by General Patrick Hurley—this man whom the President appointed, the man whom he would naturally suppose he could trust, and who up to the present time has always proved trustworthy; a man of ability, patriotic, honest, hard-working, self-sacrificing. In his letter to President Roosevelt, Mr. Hurley continues:

American money and lend-lease supplies are used by this corporation and by its subsidiaries for the purpose of controlling natural resources and trade and exploiting the people in all of the nations indicated. Incidentally, it is being used also for the purpose of defeating America's economic interests in all of these nations.

They are fighting the United States. They are using our lend-lease, selling it and taking the money, and fighting with lend-lease. That is what General Hurley found over there. The letter continues:

I do not say that it is intended to defeat America's interests alone. It is designed to prevent free enterprise, free commerce, free access to raw materials by all nations except Britain. The United Kingdom Commercial Corp. is the antithesis of the Atlantic Charter.

A frank statement of this situation in my letter to you of December 21, 1943, which became public through the State Department, led to the accusation that I am anti-British. I am not anti-British.

Oh, how the British rejoiced when Dean Acheson was appointed Secretary of State. The newspapers here in Washington were filled with their statements the next morning. They said, "We are satisfied with Dean Acheson; he suits us." Is not the fact that they can take our lend-lease, sell it, and then in every one of the countries I have named establish corporations for the purpose of exploiting the common people one reason why his appointment suits them?

Mr. Hurley says—and he uses beautiful language, Mr. President:

I am opposed to imperialism. I am opposed to monopoly. I am opposed to exploitation of weaker people. It is not necessary for me to say this to you as you are fully aware of these facts, but I am stating them here so that if this letter gets into the same channels that my letter of December 21, 1943, got into it will not be as easy for those in our Government who oppose the principles of the Atlantic Charter to put their own estimate on my character and the principles I support. For that reason I am writing down here that I do believe in democracy. I do believe that the people of the world should have equal rights of access to the raw materials of the world. I do believe that the people of small nations should be assisted in the development of their own resources for the benefit of themselves. I do believe that the resources and trade of nations should be developed primarily for the purpose of raising the standard of living within each nation. I am in favor of the principles for which you and Mr. Churchill have stated we are fighting. I am opposed to the British policy of imperialism and monopoly and exploitation in the Middle East and in Africa. I am convinced that this British policy is in conflict with the principles for which you and Mr. Churchill have stated we are fighting. I do believe that the destiny of the English speaking people is a single destiny. I do believe that the United States and Britain should get together on principles. From the facts stated here it is evident that the British do not uphold the principles of the Atlantic Charter.

The failure of your program in Iran is due (1) to incompetence and lack of leadership of some of our own agents in Iran; (2) opposition to the plan in our own State Department; (3) to the determined opposition of British imperialists, and (4) to the strong, intelligent and determined opposition of the United Kingdom Commercial Corp.

My purpose in addressing this letter to you is to call your attention to the deterioration of America's position in Iran and to emphasize the effect of that deterioration on the prestige of America. I have no recommendations to offer other than those stated in my former letter. I do suggest the advisability of taking appropriate action to correct the situation in Iran; to restate or reaffirm your policy and to retrieve America's prestige.

Respectfully submitted,

PATRICK J. HURLEY,
Major General, A. U. S.

Here then, Mr. President, is the way in which our own State Department representatives helped to plant the roots of imperial exploitation which are now bearing such bitter fruit. The tragic concesions that were made to Russia, already dealt with above, continue to be strengthened by the policies we are pursuing.

Not only have we subsidized the spread of British trading monopolies with lend-lease goods, during and since the end of the war, not only have we been financing British exploitation of weaker peoples in Africa and Asia, not only have we squeezed American business interests out of these areas with our own money, on this side of the iron curtain, but we have been doing exactly the same thing on the other side.

The fact is that for years we have been financing an expansion of British trade and financial interests on the other side of the iron curtain, to such an extent that we are now making a mockery of the cold war, both sides of which we are financing at the expense of the American taxpayer.

At this very moment Britain is moving in and taking over the trading concessions behind the iron curtain, which we are forbidding the American people to touch.

We say to our American business men, "You cannot go behind the iron curtain in order to get business." At the same time, we are putting up money so that the British can go there, and they are going there.

As proof of this fact let me cite a few examples.

First, let us remember that the Russian blockade of Berlin was answered by the United States with a counter-blockade of the eastern zone. Yet, this action has been largely negated by the British, since supplies of almost all the materials the eastern zone used to get from the west are now being shipped in increasing quantities through the British zone. Even in the British sector of Berlin, a profitable trade with the Russians continues in a trading system that involves both outright barter and cash payments in hard currency or gold.

We can keep on flying in materials. We can keep on saying to American business men, "You cannot do business behind the iron curtain"; but Great Britain is doing it every day, every hour, every minute.

It also now develops that Britain is extending her activity further into the Russian sphere in bilateral trade arrangements both with the satellite countries and with Russia herself.

For example, let us look at what is happening under the British 5-year trade and financial agreement with Poland.

This involves such an increased volume of trade that it will definitely cut British imports from Canada and replace them with imports from behind the iron curtain.

We have voted many billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money. But the people told the Republicans what they thought of that policy, and they told them in no uncertain terms. The Democrats said, "We will give them $1,000,000,000." The Republicans said, "Let us make it $2,000,000,000." The vote in the Foreign Relations Committee was unanimous. I, as a member of the farmer-labor branch of the Republican Party, am here alone, and I assure my Republican colleagues that the people of America shall know the record. It is time they found out about it.

As to taxes, the President calls for $4,000,000,000 additional taxes. I am not surprised that there are not more Senators upon the floor; I am not surprised at all. I am the lone member of the farmer-labor branch of the Republican Party in the Senate. I felt flattered a day or two ago when one of the distinguished Republican Senators, who is up for reelection 2 years from now, asked me to come into his State and campaign for him. There is a group of 6, 8, or 10 Senators on the Republican side who feel as I do, as is evidenced by the resolution introduced today by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. I want to assure the Senate that we do not want to give away America. There may be only a small group of us upon the floor, but it is a group that will fight, bring out the facts for the benefit of the American people, and call a spade a spade, without regard to the distinction between Republicans and Democrats.

Mr. President, I said a moment ago that England was getting this trade away from the United States, going behind the iron curtain and getting it. I mentioned the 5-year trade and finance agreement regarding Poland which England has made. Let us look at what is happening. Already this agreement calls for a tremendous increase in imports over present levels of such commodities as eggs, bacon, and lumber products. Polish shipments of eggs will rise from 435,000 to 1,100,000 boxes annually—frozen eggs from 3,500 to 8,000 tons in 1953. I have here a letter from a North Dakota farmer, which indicates that farmers there are getting 33 cents a dozen for their eggs. The shipment of frozen eggs, as I have said, will rise from 3,500 to 8,000 tons in 1953. 1949's shipments of lumber to Britain will be augmented by over a billion dollars' worth of lumber products.

Britain is already increasing her trade with Russia directly under agreements which are still in force, and she is carrying on negotiations to increase this trade on a permanent basis.

A picture of how this is developing, particularly in the Far East, is contained in the International Statistical Bureau's Foreign Letter of February 4, 1949, from which I quote:

> Hong Kong, for example, has its own currency, but it is also one of the largest trading centers in free- and transferable-account sterling. British and Dutch firms may sell Chinese goods in the United States, acquire dollars, buy transferable-account sterling at a discount of 15 to 20 percent, and with it buy British goods for reexport into China, Macao, or other areas where hard currency can be obtained.
> Great Britain's imports from the United States declined about 40 percent last year but Hong Kong's imports from the United States increased by about 27 percent. Hong Kong's exports to Malaya and to the British Commonwealth countries were more or less stagnant but there was a major increase in shipments to China and Macao.
> Closer analysis shows that exports from Hong Kong to southern and central China decreased, while shipments to the Communist-controlled north and to such black market centers as Macao rose sharply.

The Communists got more than ever.

> Macao is a Portuguese colony off the China coast, opposite the mouth of the Canton River, having a population of 375,000 and an area of 14 square miles. Exports from Hong Kong to Macao have been almost twice as great as exports to the United Kingdom and not much less than exports to the United States.
> Another even more striking example is trade with Russian-controlled Northern Korea via Hong Kong. Northern Korea is practically a forbidden zone for American traders, but Hong Kong's shipments to this area are booming and profits of 100 to 200 percent are not unusual.

Mind you, Mr. President, I am quoting that from the International Statistical Bureau's Foreign Letter of February 4. It proceeds.

> Payments are made in local produce or in goods produced in the U. S. S. R. and shipped especially to Northern Korea for reexport to the Western Hemisphere via Kong Kong.

An even more glaring example of how we are continuing to underwrite everybody else's interests but our own, and to play into the hands of the Communists on both sides of the Iron Curtain, can be found in recent developments in Indonesia.

What about Indonesia? The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] was especially concerned, when he offered his resolution on behalf of himself and a group of other Senators, about Indonesia.

It is strange that the real story of what is taking place there has been so completely suppressed. The fact of the matter is that, in direct violation of our own promises to the Indonesians that we would support their drive for independence when the war ended, we have been supporting Dutch tyranny and aggression with American taxpayers' money ever since.

When the Dutch moved in, just before Christmas, and captured the Republican Nationalist Government leaders, they took that action supported by Marshall plan dollars. It is terribly significant that the expenses of this war do not appear in the Dutch budget as an expense item, but rather as a credit, which they are going to force the new United States of Indonesia Government to assume, when the final arrangements are made to set that Government up.

This means that by the time this takes place, the Indonesians will have become so burdened with the war debt incurred by the Dutch that the representatives of that Government will actually do no more than serve as exorbitant tax collectors for the Dutch, exploiting their own people and their tremendous raw material resources, for the benefit of the Dutch, who in turn, will exploit America's need for these materials, without making any part of the resulting profits available to the Indonesians who produced them.

What is more Mr. President, these policies are also resulting in the exclusion of American firms from the Indonesian market.

On December 24, 1948, Mr. Thomas Conroy, business editor of the New York Times, wrote:

> The quota regulations set up by the Netherlands Indies Government, it was asserted by exporters here, have almost completely barred the American exporter from enjoying any portion of this business (that is, United States exports of almost $250,000,000 to Indonesia in 1946, 1947, and 1948.)
> It is understood that representations on this situation have been made to the State Department, from time to time. Although the State Department has appeared sympathetic to these protests, it has not seen fit to take any effective action to remedy these conditions.

Mr. Conroy went on to charge:

> It was explained for background that a number of Dutch East Indies official, semi-official, and private purchasing missions have been established in the United States through which that business has been channeled.
> Moreover, according to the exporting fraternity here, they know of no other country, and many of them have as compelling foreign-exchange problems as does the Netherlands Indies, which monopolizes the trade to such an extent.

Mr. President, the same picture holds true of France in Indochina. All of this is confirmed in a recent pact agreed upon by England, France, and the Netherlands, to the effect that they would stand by each other in their plans to reimpose their systems of imperial exploitation in every possible area around the world.

This then is what has become of the Atlantic Charter principles, and of the genuine plan for American international cooperation drawn up by General Hurley and endorsed by the late President.

It is against this background that we must now project the President's inaugural address, because there are two different worlds here represented.

During his inaugural address, President Truman once more reaffirmed the basic American principles for which this Nation stands, and upon our faithful adherence to which our future is utterly dependent, when he said:

> Our aim should be to help the free peoples of the world through their own efforts, to produce more food, more clothing, more materials for housing, and more mechanical power to lighten their burdens.
> Such new economic developments must be devised and controlled to benefit the peoples of the areas in which they are established. The old imperialism—exploitation for private profit—has no place in our plans. What we envisage is a program of development based on the concepts of democratic fair dealing.

Yet, Mr. President, not only is this bold, new program compromised by existing programs which are based on the principles of cruel exploitation, it is also based on a return to the fallacy that American taxpayers must spend the rest of their lives bailing out the peoples whom we are helping to keep in permanent bankruptcy and bondage.

Mr. President, the time has come to hold a complete and honest review of our whole over-all foreign policy, if we are to be able to undo the tragic blunders of the past, and take advantage of our last chance to restore the principles of the Atlantic Charter and of our own magnificent tradition as the basis of our domestic and foreign relations.

If the President fails to meet this challenge of these critical times, and seeks to perpetuate on a permanent basis more of this pathological internationalism that is destroying us as a free and sovereign people, then the United States Senate should rise to the challenge, drag this whole sorry matter out in the open, for all to see, repudiate the blunders and betrayals that have taken place, and rewrite the foundation of a genuine American foreign policy right here on the Senate floor.

If this becomes our only recourse, we shall be doing only what the late President Roosevelt himself recognized to be the sovereign duty of the representatives of the American people to protect their own interests, when he wrote to Stalin on March 24, 1945, to protest Soviet violations of their agreement:

> I am sure you are aware that genuine popular support in the United States is required to carry out any governmental policy, foreign or domestic. The American people make up their own mind and no governmental action can change it.

Mr. President, the time has come to give the American people this last chance to make their own decisions, and to take control of their own destiny back into their own hands once more.

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY OF MARITIME COMMISSION TO SELL AND OPERATE VESSELS, ETC.

During the delivery of Mr. LANGER's speech,

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment, with the understanding that my remarks and any further proceedings in connection therewith will be placed at the conclusion of his address, so that it will not be interrupted in the RECORD?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I should like to have called up at this time a joint resolution dealing with the Maritime Commission. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 51, which is the same as House Joint Resolution 92.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I did not realize that this question would be raised to interrupt the Senator from North Dakota, and I would not wish to do so. I understood that the joint resolution was agreeable to both sides. I spoke to the minority leader about it, and I understood that it had been cleared.

Mr. KNOWLAND. But I understand that the Senator from Washington has an amendment to offer.

Mr. BREWSTER. The amendment will be offered by me.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Senator from Maine has an amendment. The joint resolution is unanimously reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and the House joint resolution has the approval of the House committee.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I have been left here as acting minority leader. Because of the small attendance of Senators in the Chamber at this time, I feel that under the circumstances we should have a quorum call.

Mr. LANGER. Then I decline to yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will withdraw the point of no quorum, I will yield the floor.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I decline to yield at this time.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to sell, charter, and operate vessels, and for other purposes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I withdrew my point of no quorum, on the theory that the Senator from North Dakota would proceed with his remarks.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I decline to yield further.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my request for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

After the conclusion of Mr. LANGER's speech,

SUGGESTION FOR RECALL OF GENERAL MACARTHUR TO PRESENT HIS VIEWS REGARDING THE FAR EAST

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, on yesterday I addressed a letter to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], chairman of the Armed Services Committee, as follows:

FEBRUARY 16, 1949.

Hon. MILLARD TYDINGS,
Armed Services Committee,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In view of recent press dispatches that have cast some doubt upon our Pacific military policy, and the demands that will soon be made upon the Congress for military assistance to western Europe, I believe that it is vital that members of the Armed Services Committee be fully informed on all phases of the entire global situation. For this reason, I strongly urge that the Senate Armed Services Committee extend an invitation to Gen. Douglas MacArthur to return to the United States to present his views of the situation existing in the Far East and its effect upon the national defense of the United States and its territories.

With best personal regards, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senator.

Mr. President, it will be recalled that about a year ago the suggestion was made that General MacArthur return to the United States and appear at that time before the Senate Appropriations Committee. The general quite properly declined to do so, first, because of his duties in the Pacific area at that time, and, second, because the United States was then engaged in the preliminaries to a great political campaign. The general apparently felt that his return at that time might be misunderstood. I think his reasons were perfectly valid.

At the present time, however, Mr. President, the situation is entirely different. The Senate of the United States in a short time is going to be called upon not only to make substantial appropriations for the continued support of the ECA program, but is also going to be called upon to make substantial appropriations for military support to western Europe.

I have been concerned of late, as I think a number of other Members of the Senate have been, over recent reports emanating from Tokio to the effect that there perhaps has been a basic change in American policy toward Japan. I hope there has been no basic change in American policy in regard to keeping Japan from falling prey to communism. I can think of nothing, Mr. President, that would do more to undermine the hope of establishing a free democratic government in Japan and retard the economic recovery of that country than for anyone in a responsible position to indicate that the United States might, under present world conditions withdraw from the islands of Japan, or in the event of Soviet aggression might abandon them into the hands of Soviet Russia.

With respect to what has happened in China our policy in that regard should be reexamined. The Yalta agreement made certain commitments to Soviet Russia at the expense of our historic friends, the Chinese National Government. Those agreements which were made at that time certainly have contributed mightily to the problems faced by China today.

At a time when I think all of us agree on the importance of preventing western Europe from going behind the iron curtain to me it simply does not make sense for our nation to sit complacently by while some 450,000,000 of our traditional friends, the Chinese, are taken behind the iron curtain. It does not seem wise to me that there should be even contemplated, Mr. President, the possibility of further retreat in the Far East and out of the islands of Japan.

For that reason it seems to me that it would be entirely fitting and proper for General MacArthur to return to this country and give the Members of the Senate and of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and such other committees as might want to hear his testimony, the benefit of his advice.

This is a matter that relates to the national defense of the United States of America. Perhaps those of us who represent Pacific Coast States, Mr. President, may be pardoned for having a particular interest in this regard, but the waters of the Pacific Ocean wash upon our States. It was not so very many years ago that we had in the State of California, so far as I know, the only enemy shelling of an American State by an enemy submarine. We saw the encroachments at that time of one of the Axis partners coming down through Alaska and establishing enemy bases in that territory. We want no repetition of that kind should the world be so unfortunate as to become engaged in another war at some time in the future.

Mr. President, the members of the Senate Armed Services Committee have a responsibility to themselves, to the Congress, and to the country, to secure as much and as complete information as possible on the entire global situation before we make our final decisions.

Mr. BREWSTER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from California an address delivered by me in Sacramento, Calif., on last Friday night, dealing with the subject of American policy in the Orient, which was the subject which the Senator from California discussed.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY IN THE ORIENT

(Address by Senator OWEN BREWSTER, of Maine, before Lincoln Club at Sacramento, Calif., on Friday evening, February 11, 1949)

California is justly proud of its myriad products but its greatest product is the United Nations.

Here on the shores of the Pacific at the Golden Gate this age-old vision of a united world at last had its dramatic birth.

The child is having a tough time. The iron curtain of communism threatens to clang down on the Open Door in the Orient.

The American doctrine of this century of a free and peaceful Orient is threatened with destruction by the advancing hordes of a modern Genghis Kahn.

Certainly no one on the west coast will have any illusions as to American trade with a Communist-dominated China on any other terms than seem at the time advantageous to the masters of the Kremlin.

As our own Ambassador Philip C. Jessup well said in the Security Council on January 11, 1949; "No one doubts that the Communists in Indonesia like the Communists throughout the world are responsive to and act in accordance with instructions from Moscow. * * * Anywhere in the world when a Communist government climbs in through the window, independence is kicked out the door."

The velvet paws of the present will all too soon disclose their cruel claws when the time seems ripe to strike.

Every consideration of decency and self-interest argues for America to stand firm against Communist domination of the Orient.

I do not say our State Department is under Communist control. I say that if Stalin had been in charge of our State Department for the past 3 years he could not have done a better job to serve the cause of Communist penetration in China.

With the world war ended there was every reason to expect China would be restored to its ancient dominion in accordance with the pledge to Chiang at Cairo by Roosevelt and Churchill.

What happened? Stalin under the secret agreement at Yalta (of which not even General Marshall had been informed) was given control of Manchuria. The vast stores of Japanese war matériel and the even more important munition production of Manchuria were placed at the service of the Communists. Time was necessary to reorganize and mobilize this enormous military potential. Now note the coincidence.

For 10 months all American military aid was cut off to Chiang while the State Department sought to force Chiang to take the Communists into his government. For the following 10 months with the American embargo lifted it proved impracticable for any material shipments to be made.

Vast and insidious agencies of propaganda were operating full blast to discredit the Chiang regime with apparently the full sympathy of the responsible authorities in our State Department.

Chennault, Wedemeyer, Hurley, and Bullitt might warn in vain. Chiang seemed doomed to destruction by the official voice of the State Department even though he was obviously the only challenge to Communist domination.

Why has the Wedemeyer report never yet been released to the American public? Is it because it pointed out the deadly peril of Soviet domination of Manchuria? Is it because it suggested a United Nations' mandate for Manchuria?

Is it not now clearly evident that Berlin was simply a side show to distract our attention while communism engulfed the Orient?

Similarly a republic regime in Indonesia is in process of destruction while the United Nations wrings its hands in vain protest and the United States supplies hundreds of millions of American dollars to the government that defies the United Nations.

Listen to a leader of American communism: "With Chiang liquidated the Soviet member of the United Nations Security Council will announce that he represents more than one-half the population of the globe and Americans will hang their heads in shame."

Two of the five permanent members of the Security Council will be Communists and France totters on the brink.

The Pacific coast owes it to their fellow Americans to make its voice heard.

A Communist-dominated Asia means a menace to everything for which America now stands.

The Republican Party has never left its position in doubt as to the vital importance of a peaceful Pacific to our national security.

What shall it profit us to stabilize Europe and lose all influence in the Orient?

Fifty years of patient cultivation of friendly relations with China seem in danger of destruction in the very hour of our triumph.

With the Japanese menace eliminated, peace in the Pacific, and all that implies, was easily within our grasp. Now we see it turn to ashes in our hands.

Our sons and grandsons may well pay a bitter price for our tragic failure in the very hour of victory.

Once again we have won a war and now proceed to lose the peace.

Mr. IVES subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to speak for just a moment on the question just discussed by the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. I beg the attention of the Senate while I support as strongly as I can the recommendation which he has just made to have Gen. Douglas MacArthur come to this country and appear before either the Armed Services Committee of the Senate or such other committees as it may be desirable to have him appear before, for the purpose of obtaining as much knowledge as possible at this particularly important time with regard to the questions now confronting us in the Pacific.

I do not believe that the Pacific coast is the only part of the United States which is interested in having General MacArthur come to this country. Speaking for the State of New York, I know that there is intense interest among many of our citizens in having Douglas MacArthur come to this country to place himself in a position where the vast knowledge which he must have can be made available to our Government and our people. Perhaps other Senators have spoken on this subject prior to the remarks of the Senator from California and myself.

Of course, I assume that certain portions of the Government, such as the executive branch and the armed services, may be obtaining this information, and presumably are obtaining it. But the Congress is not getting it. The rank and file of the people in this country are not getting it. I know definitely that all Americans everywhere undoubtedly would feel a great deal more comfortable if they knew that all the knowledge which that great American possesses—and undoubtedly he knows more about the Pacific and the Pacific problems than any other living American—would be placed at our disposal for our use and our advantage, and for the advantage of the country. So I strongly support the suggestion which I just heard submitted to the Senate by the dintinguished Senator from California.

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO MARITIME COMMISSION TO SELL AND OPERATE VESSELS, ETC.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 51, Calendar No. 39.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to sell, charter, and operate vessels, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, Senate Joint Resolution 51 is identical with House Joint Resolution 92, which has been favorably reported unanimously by the House committee. The House has granted a rule on the joint resolution, and the resolution is going to be considered in the House today. The two resolutions provide for the extension of the Maritime Commission authority to buy, to charter, to sell, and to operate ships until June 30, 1949. The joint resolution has been unanimously reported from the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The reason we have set the date at June 30, 1949, to correspond with the House committee action is that both committees, the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, hope to have a real review of our maritime plight by that time, with a view of enacting permanent legislation regarding the sale, charter, and operation of ships.

The American flag is rapidly going off the seas. The American merchant marine has disintegrated in front of our eyes, from 1,200 ships operating under the American flag 16 months ago to only about 360 ships operating under the American flag today. The Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce expects to go into the subject. We hope to be able to do something not only with regard to the policies of the Maritime Commission and the establishment of a national maritime policy, which we do not have today, but we also hope to consider the question of ERC, and shipments in American bottoms, as well as the question of the Army and the Navy being in the shipping business.

Paradoxically, Mr. President, the Army's navy today, in competition with the American merchant marine, has more ships operating on the seas than has the merchant marine itself. The Navy is in the shipping business. Several American operators have sought to circumvent American taxation and American rules and regulations by operating under the Panamanian and Liberian flags.

All these things have led to a disintegration in the American merchant marine, and we are finding ourselves in the same position in regard to our merchant marine that we were in after World War I. I think the Congress should take some action about it. Something should be done in all branches of government, and with private operators, labor, and all other groups involved, in an effort to provide a strong merchant marine.

In view of the fact that we intend to give the question an honest review, we have extended the date to June 30, 1948, in the hope that we can report to Congress some permanent legislation, or at least undertake to establish a permanent merchant marine policy. I hope the Senate bill will pass the joint resolution. This authority expires on February 28, and it is quite necessary that we act this week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 51?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to sell, charter, and operate vessels, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "date" to strike out "March 1, 1950" and insert "June 30, 1949," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That (a) the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to continue until March 1, 1949, the authority of the Maritime Commission to sell, charter, and operate vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1948 (Public Law 423, 80th Cong.), is amended by striking out the date "March 1, 1949" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof the date June 30, 1949. That joint resolution is further amended by inserting at the end of subparagraph (b) thereof the words "Provided, however, That vessels may be chartered to the Republic of the Philippines, or citizens thereof, for use in the interisland commerce of the Philippines in accordance with section 306 of the Philippine Rehabilitation Act of April 30, 1946 (60 Stat. 137; U. S. C., 1946 edition, table 50, sec. 1786)."

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator that there is a committee amendment first to be considered.

Mr. BREWSTER. I will await disposition of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the joint resolution it is proposed to insert the following proviso: "Provided, further, That the Maritime Commission is hereby authorized to approve without condition the transfer of flag or sale foreign under section 9 of the Shipping Act of 1916, of any vessel owned by a citizen or citizens of the United States, which was acquired by the United States pursuant to a determination by the Inter-allied Reparation Agency Shipping Committee and thereafter sold to such citizen by the Maritime Commission, if in the opinion of the Maritime Commission such vessel is not necessary or economically desirable for permanent use in the American merchant marine."

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, this amendment relates only to ships which were acquired from foreign countries by the United States under the reparations agreements. The only ships which I know of that are immediately involved are four ships acquired from German registry, which it has been found entirely impracticable to operate under the American flag. There was some question in the Maritime Commission as to whether or not it had the authority to authorize their transfer. The first opinion was that it did not. Subsequently the Commission has indicated that perhaps it does have the authority, and it has now asked for a hearing on the question, which will be held shortly. However, in order to clear up any doubt as to the authority of the Commission, I am offering this amendment, which I trust will be accepted.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator from Maine, and the amendment is perfectly acceptable. However, it should be understood, as the Senator from Maine has said, that this applies only to foreign ships. I think the Congress should know that while this authority is to be continued until June 30, 1949, the Maritime Commission still adheres to the policy of refusal to sell American-built ships to foreign governments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENLARGEMENT AND EXTENSION OF THE MARSHALL PLAN

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations is now engaged in hearings upon the continuation of ECA. As a member of the committee I have listened to a great part of the hearings with the greatest of interest. As I announced in the discussions yesterday afternoon in the hearings, I shall support fully the sums requested by ECA authorities and by the State Department and by the President. I believe the Marshall plan, so-called, has achieved great progress, that it has made possible immense strides in the rehabilitation of the war-devastated areas of Europe, and in strengthening democracy in the world. As I said yesterday, I could not but feel some regret, when I heard recitals of how effectively the nations which are the recipients of this aid have worked together, that that pattern could not be the form of cooperation of the whole world.

In the course of yesterday afternoon's hearing Mr. Paul Hoffman stated that not only had the recipient nations, 19 in number, had to work together to better their conditions, but they would have to cooperate in the future to preserve the gains which they have won or shall have won under the ECA program.

I hope, however, Mr. President, that we shall find it possible to continue and enlarge the reach of such a program to other parts of the earth. If it is good for the countries of western Europe to be rehabilitated, to regain their democratic strength, to become more valuable contributors to world commerce and trade, then I think at least with respect to other areas of the world which embrace democracy the same advantages would lie. I have regretted somewhat the specialized motivation for the ECA program, which I think I have discovered in some sources. I regard the ECA program not as merely a program to stop communism or to arrest aggressive nationalism, but as an affirmative program which will contribute to a more prosperous world and therefore to a more prosperous and secure United States of America. And of course my own interest is primarily in the effect which the program will have upon the security and the economic strength and power of our own country.

Mr. President, when we have achieved that level of progress with ECA which will make it possible for us to shift the emphasis to other non-Communist areas of the earth, if the Communist areas show the proper spirit of cooperation and accord, the proper observance of the principles of the international charter, and contribute to making ours a peaceful and prosperous world, then of course they themselves, as General Marshall has said, might also be included in such a program. But I hope we shall recognize, when the program reaches its peak, and when it comes to a conclusion, that it has achieved a measure of success and conferred benefits not only upon other countries but upon ours, which will justify us in attempting to enlarge its beneficence and its munificence to other areas of the world where the need is so crying as it is today. I believe the world must work together, not only to have peace, but to enjoy prosperity, and that those nations that have interrupted world economic cooperation are themselves the greater losers for their obstructive tactics. I hope some day that self-interest, without referring to human obligations, will induce all peoples to bring themselves, through the United Nations, into a truly cooperative world.

Therefore, Mr. President, feeling that way about it I was very much gratified at point 4, which was contained in the inaugural address of the President. There are certain brief passages in that portion of the President's address to which I should like to advert. Said the President:

> I believe that we should make available to peace-loving peoples the benefits of our store of technical knowledge in order to help them realize their aspirations for a better life. And, in cooperation with other nations, we should foster capital investment in areas needing development.
> Our aim should be to help the free peoples of the world, through their own efforts to produce more food, more clothing, more materials for housing, and more mechanical power to lighten their burdens.
> We invite other countries to pool their technological resources in this undertaking. Their contributions will be warmly welcomed. This should be a cooperative enterprise in which all nations work together through the United Nations and its specialized agencies whenever practicable. It must be a world-wide effort for the achievement of peace, plenty, and freedom.
> With the cooperation of business, private capital, agriculture, and labor in this country, this program can greatly increase the industrial activity in other nations and can raise substantially their standards of living.
> Such new economic developments must be devised and controlled to benefit the peoples of the areas in which they are established. Guaranties to the investor must be balanced by guaranties in the interest of the people whose resources and whose labor go into these developments.
> The old imperialism—exploitation for foreign profit—has no place in our plans. What we envisage is a program of development based on the concepts of democratic fair dealing.

The concluding paragraph in that very conspicuous portion of this very able address was this:

> Democracy alone can supply the vitalizing force to stir the peoples of the world into triumphant action, not only against their human oppressors, but also against their ancient enemies—hunger, misery, and despair.

I am an optimist about the future.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Am I correct in understanding the Senator to advocate that ECA assistance be now extended behind the iron curtain?

Mr. PEPPER. I have certainly said just the contrary. I am glad the Senator gave me a point to leave no possible ambiguity in the minds of any hearer.

Mr. FERGUSON. I merely wondered whether there was any doubt about it.

Mr. PEPPER. Not in the slightest. I laid down the standards, when they would become the recipients. They were the same standards as those promulgated by General Marshall when the Marshall plan was first proposed, namely, their willingness to subscribe to the principles of the United Nations Charter and to become cooperative parts of a peaceful and cooperative world.

Mr. President, I believe the future holds the brightest era of all history for us. With the technology we possess at the present time, with the business genius the world possesses, with the natural resources yet to be exploited and developed, the golden age of all history is with the dawn and not with the sunset, or even the noon.

But it is essential to American prosperity that we help other parts of the earth to be prosperous as well as peaceful. We have a capacity which we cannot consume in this country of ours. We must find markets. Those markets must come either from the alteration of our own economic system, so that we shall provide out of our bounty for those who cannot even buy, or we must stimulate other areas of the world to a fair participation in trade which will make them buyers from us and sellers to us, and we, buyers from and sellers to them. The backward parts of the earth particularly cry out for our technological skill, for the genius of our businessmen, for the assistance of our capital, and for the beneficent influence that our great Government may extend to them in their own effort. That particularly applies to our own hemisphere, where boundless resources are yet to be tapped, and where almost unimaginable progress is a possibility for the future.

That brings me to an observation I particularly rose to make, which is, that it must be understood by those who want American assistance that they must receive it and deal with us in the same way we receive their assistance and deal with them. A foreign corporation operating in the United States, for example, observes only the law of the land. Foreign corporations are not discriminated against in the United States. They receive no special favors. Once they are admitted into the heart of our Nation and life and people, they meet competition just as other entrepeneurs do. They receive the benefits of our blessings, and they must bear their share of our duties and burdens. I am afraid that is not always true according to present practices in some of our sister republics in the Western Hemisphere. I am thinking now of some of the general tendencies we hear about almost daily—instances of coup d'états by military cliques—instances of democratic governments being deposed by military coercion. The American people do not subscribe to the principles related to such practices. We hear of other cases where legitimately chosen governments are ousted from their authority by anarchy and force of one kind or another. That, too, is strange to the American concept of democracy.

In still other cases, Mr. President, our business enterprises are discriminated against. They are the victims of discriminatory policies which other business enterprises in competition with them do not have to bear. That also is not in accord with our concepts of fair dealing and with the premises upon which we generally extend aid to other peoples of the earth. I have in mind a recent case occurring in Guatemala, where a great American enterprise, the United Fruit Co., in the words of the president of that very country, had been discriminated against by the action of the Guatemalan Government. For instance, President Arevalo himself advised the United States Ambassador, so I am informed, that a certain law was obviously intentionally discriminatory against this American company, and that he, the President, thought it was a machine gun aimed at the head of this American company, and that he, the President, agreed that the discrimination should be removed, and that he would do everything possible to effect its removal. These assurances, so I understand, have repeatedly been given to our State Department in the past few months; and I am informed that it is the policy of the President of that country to try to rid his government of the criticism that she had adopted discriminatory practices and policies toward this very enterprising and highly valued American company.

Mr. President, I do not wish to be misunderstood. I do not desire to see America return to the days of the past, the lamentable past, when American marines stood at the command of the Government of the United States to collect corporate debts and sometimes to enforce corporate preferences in our part of the world. Certainly, I shall to the limit of my ability resist any effort to return to such odious practices on the part of American business or American Government. But, Mr. President, at the same time that I would be the first, if I could, to condemn American abuse of the hospitality of a foreign country by American entrepreneurs by means of attempting to take that which is not fairly theirs, or to enjoy privileges which they have no right to request, I would be equally alert in extending warnings to those who would discriminate against our enterprising investors, against our business concerns, and I would point out that that cannot be the way by which they or their country may obtain or enjoy the greatest cooperation from the American Government or the American people.

Mr. President, I hope that the countries of South America and Central America, our sister republics who hold such close places in our affections, who lie so close to our country and to our hearts, will recognize that they have a collective responsibility to see to it that when American capital and American enterprise venture forth to enjoy their hospitality, they, like all others who enjoy hospitality, shall accept it upon fair conditions; but at the same time, Mr. President, I hope they will recognize intelligently that their own self-interest, as well as hemispheric and world prosperity, are related to their extending the same nondiscriminatory, fair conditions of investment and operation to American investors and entrepreneurs, when they happen to go into those countries, as may be enjoyed either by other foreign interests or by domestic enterprises of the same character which occupy the same relative positions.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to my able friend from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have listened with much interest to all that the Senator from Florida has had to say. I was also very much interested in the address delivered on this floor on Monday by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. PEPPER. So was I.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Massachusetts spoke along the same lines on which the Senator from Florida has spoken today, giving emphasis to the proposition that there must be mutuality in the matter of aid—that it is a two-way street.

The Senator from Florida has well stated—and in stating his position, he certainly states my position—that we are unalterably opposed to any imperialism or any imperialistic designs; we are unalterably opposed to any return to the lamentable past, as the Senator has so aptly described it, when marines were used, or when anything of that kind occurred in connection with any of our sister republics in Central America or South America.

In fact, I take it that the Senator from Florida and I stand here today, as we speak, in keeping with the spirit of the good-neighbor policy of Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Cordell Hull, wishing to extend a helping hand to the people of South America and Central America, particularly those who must live and must work out their existence in the more backward areas. But if we are to extend a helping hand, it must be received in a spirit of justice and of equality and of fair play. There must not be discrimination against the interests of the United States or the interests of United States companies or United States nationals.

The Senator from Florida spoke of the United Fruit Co. That is a great company. As the Senator from Florida well knows, as a native Alabamian, we have in Alabama the great port of Mobile. We are proud of that port as one of the great ports, not only of the Gulf area, but of the whole United States. The United Fruit Co. does much business in that port; it makes many contributions to the business and the success of that port. We like the United Fruit Co., and we do not appreciate the discriminations which now are being practiced against it in Guatemala and perhaps in some other places.

I recall that during the war the United Fruit Co. rendered a very great service to our country. As the Senator from Florida well recalls, before the war our Navy was almost entirely dependent on the Far East for the hemp it had to have to carry on its operations successfully. The United Fruit Co. went into Latin America, and provided the engineering techniques and the agricultural skills for the production of hemp; and thus the United States Navy, in the time of the great stress and danger of war, was enabled to have an adequate supply of hemp it so badly needed.

I understand that that company has been carrying out plans for the production, perhaps, of rubber and other agricultural products which will give us, shall we say, a living, growing stock pile, so as to free us from our dependence upon the Far East for these vital strategic products. We know from our experience in the last war that we can no longer rest easy when we are dependent upon products coming great distances from places located in the Far East. This company has rendered and is rendering today a great service. I would be the last person to ask for any special favor or for any special privilege for it, or for any other company, but surely we have a right to ask that it be treated fairly, that it be not discriminated against, that it have a right to go into those countries to render help and to give aid to them and to their people. That is exactly the idea the Senator from Florida has so well expressed here today. I want to join with him.

Mr. President, I should like to say another thing while I am on my feet. From what we know of the situation in Guatemala, and perhaps in other countries, the labor unions in those countries are completely dominated and controlled by whichever faction happens to be in control of the Government. Those labor unions are used as mere pawns, under the command of the governing clique. They are used against the best interests of the United States.

I simply rose, Mr. President, because I was interested in the remarks of the Senator from Florida, and to associate myself with him. We wish to render aid to Latin America, but we insist that when we do extend a helping hand the people of the United States should be treated with fairness, equity, and justice.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am very deeply indebted to the able senior Senator from Alabama. Whenever he addresses himself to a subject he makes a very great contribution to it. If I, in my feeble remarks, have precipitated the very able utterances which the senior Senator from Alabama has made, I have been successful far beyond my anticipation.

Mr. President, I remember being in a certain part of the world and being told by representatives of a particular government there that another nation, which was the recipient of American assistance, had requested it not to give certain concessions to the United States which were of a public nature. I do not consider that to be fair dealing. We want to deal as a good neighbor and friend, and as an intelligently self-interested people, with all nations and peoples in the world. The same principle applies where it is not a matter of one nation which is the recipient of our aid asking others to discriminate against us as in instances where the nation itself which seeks and needs American help, as we need its assistance and good will, proposes to discriminate against American entrepreneurs.

I say this with particular interest in and affection for Central and South America. As the able present occupant of the chair knows, we in Florida pride ourselves upon our feeling of kinship as well as upon our geographic propinquity to the people of Central and South America. We often speak of ourselves as representing in friendship the outstretched hand of the United States of America to Central and South America.

Mr. President, I have said what I have said today because I am one of those who will hardly be exceeded by any other Senator in the Chamber in favoring American assistance to those people. I think there are involved immeasurable opportunities for them, for us, and for the world. What I have said has not been intended as being said in any spirit of criticism, of rebuke, or of reproach, but, as best I could, as an interpretation of what I believe to be the general sentiments of our Government and of our people in respect to the matters which I have mentioned.

So let us seek to work more closely together. Let us preserve integrity of property, integrity of person, and integrity of human liberty everywhere in the world, or, at least, let us form a great community of nations and peoples who believe in those principles and who will promote them to the best of their ability. We can bring prosperity and peace to a great part of the world. Some of us are persuaded that by our good example and by what we may be able to accomplish together we may establish a pattern for all the nations of the world.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, no Senator, of course, would quarrel with wanting to help other nations and other peoples or with wanting to help our own people. I do not know of anyone who does not want to help. But we cannot help individuals, nations, or people unless they want to be helped. There is nothing new about our technology, our scientific achievements, and our manufacturing skill. They have always been open to the world. Our great manufacturing facilities have been open to every country in the world. Our businessmen have always been anxious to sell their goods in any part of the world. Our form and type of government has been available to all the nations of the world for 165 years, and for all those years we have been anxious to have them follow our pattern and our type and form of government. We have been anxious to sell them merchandise. We have been anxious to see them do all the things which we have been doing. Our so-called know-how in America is free to all the peoples of the world. Our form of government is free to all the peoples of the world to adopt. There is no mystery connected with it.

Mr. President, if we may go back for a moment to 1933, we heard the same sort of argument and debate on the floor of the Senate when this body was considering the recognition of Russia. At that time it was stated that we should recognize Russia because the Russians were a great people, that Russia was a great nation, and that we should help Russia. We did recognize Russia. We gave Russia all of our technical knowledge and our skills, and our businessmen and engineers went over there by the dozens and the hundreds and helped to build up that great nation. My personal opinion is that one of the unpardonable sins we have committed as a nation was the recognition of Russia in 1933. We should have known at that time that our recognition of Russia was going to enable Russia to become a great nation, or a big nation, or a powerful nation. We should have known at that time that if communism became successful in Russia it would become a threat not only to our own people and our form of government but to peoples throughout the world. Yet, I believe, I am safe in saying that one of the moving factors in the recognition of Russia in 1933 was that there were some 160,000,000 people in Russia with whom we could trade, that by recognizing Russia we would open up a great market for our merchandise, our goods, and our skills, and the recognition of Russia did open up a great market. Our technicians did go over there by the hundreds, as I said a moment ago; we taught the Russians how to build factories; we taught them mass production; we initiated them into our know-how and our skills. What has been the result? The result has been that they have taken our know-how and our skills and built themselves into a powerful nation, with a form of government that is the same as it was in 1933, and now we are faced with the threat of communism, and are spending billions upon billions of dollars trying to stop it.

I am not opposed to helping any nation or any people throughout the world—I think we should do it; but what is always uppermost in my mind is that our skills and our know-how are free to all other peoples, and have been for years and years. The example of our form of government, our society, our high standard of living is free to other peoples. We have been here for 165 years as an example of how a nation and people might live, how they might enjoy a high standard of living. Yet my observation has been that none of the foreign peoples have taken advantage of it. The things in this Nation which are free to all the peoples of the world, they seem to ignore.

If I understand what the able Senator from Florida was discussing, it was that we will again dig into the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States and pour forth more billions and billions and billions of dollars. I have no particular objection to that if it is done on a basis of common horse sense; but I am wondering if we are not trying to force many things down the throats of many peoples of the world who do not want them.

Why should we finance the world? In the first place, we do not have enough money with which to finance the world. Secondly, we had one experience with recognizing a country and giving them our know-how, and I now rather suspect that we wish we had our know-how back; I rather suspect that, if we had to do it over, we would not be so free with our skills and our knowledge, and possibly if it were to be done over, we would not recognize communistic Russia.

We simply cannot go on spending billions upon billions of dollars. If, without bankrupting America, we can help other peoples by giving that which is already free to them, I am in favor of it. I am in favor of lending them some money if it can be done on what we may call the private industry basis, but I certainly shall have to oppose giving any further money to any nation anywhere in the world which is going to use the money to socialize its own industry, as is being done now in England. I do not know how many billions of the dollars we have given England since the end of the war or what percentage they have used, but we do know they have socialized the mines, they have socialized banking, they have socialized the railroads, they have practically socialized the farms; at least, they have a law which permits them to do so. They are now talking about socializing the steel industry. What are we thinking about? We are either opposed to socialism and communism or we are for them. Why should we ever spend one dime of our taxpayers' money, or give it away, to socialize some other nation when we know that if those nations become socialistic or go communistic we will go communistic?

Mr. President, it is not quite fair. It seems to me we should be a little more cautious in what we do, because I believe I could successfully prove that every foreign scheme into which we have entered in the past 25 years—and that goes back even to Republican administrations—has failed to accomplish the purpose for which it was intended. The exception to that might well be the United Nations, which has not yet had a chance. The Marshall plan, it is said, is working well. It remains to be seen whether it will be ultimately successful. But we have had nothing but failure after failure, we have had nothing but one emergency after another. Before we get through spending billions of dollars on the Marshall plan we are now talking about spending further billions of the taxpayers' money in other nations.

The things we are offering are free to all the nations throughout the world, as I said a moment ago. Our know-how and our technical knowledge, and that greatest of all things which is free to them, our type and form of government, and our way of life, they do not seem to be interested in. It seems to me as though the only things in which they are interested are our dollars.

So, Mr. President, I suggest that we go slowly. I suggest that the next move we make in international affairs, the next scheme into which we enter, we make certain it is going to work, because my observation has been that all the schemes into which we have entered have failed, as I have stated, and each and every one of them has cost the American people billions upon billions of dollars.

If we must go into these schemes and spend the taxpayers' money in order to maintain our own prosperity, then let us be honest enough to call what we pass the American Recovery Act, and not the European Recovery Act. If in this Nation we have arrived at the point where we can maintain our own economy only by taxing our people billions upon billions of dollars in order to give them away to some foreign country, in order to maintain prosperity in this Nation, then we had better stop, look, and listen, because there is something radically wrong with our own economy.

TWO-YEAR MORATORIUM FOR APPLICATION OF CERTAIN ANTITRUST LAWS

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill designed to end, at least temporarily, the present widespread uncertainty and confusion over the application of the Supreme Court decision last year in the so-called basing-point case, involving the cement industry.

This bill would suspend for 2 years any application of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act, as amended, in depriving individual companies—and this is very important—in the absence of conspiracy or combination or other agreement in restraint of trade, of the right to independently use delivered-price systems or to absorb freight to meet competition in any and all markets.

This bill is not designed to countenance contracts, combinations, conspiracies, or monopolistic practices in restraint of trade; the bill, in fact, states that such things are inimical to the public interest. Since the Supreme Court decision in the Cement case concerned itself largely with charges of collusion and conspiracy in connection with basing-point pricing, the bill would not be intended to legalize that sort of a basing-point system.

As we all know, however, all industry, all firms which have over a period of years been following a policy of freight absorption in order to enable them to compete in distant markets with firms located in those market areas, have been exceedingly disturbed by the implications of the Supreme Court decision in the Cement case, and in the case of steel particularly, the companies announced that the basing-point or freight-absorption system was being abandoned in favor of a straight f. o. b. system of pricing out of fear that any other system might violate the antitrust laws.

A special subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce held extensive hearings on this matter late last year and the hearings were resumed briefly this year. Voluminous testimony was taken on the applicability of the antitrust laws to freight absorption and the net result, as I evaluate that testimony, is one of great confusion and continued uncertainty.

A great many of the witnesses who appeared, like most of the businessmen from Pennsylvania who have written to me on the matter, regarded the decision in the Cement case as probably outlawing any type of freight absorption. Unfortunately, we have not been able to get a clear-cut opinion from any authority as to whether it does or does not.

A large number of outstanding lawyers have sought to interpret the decision, but I do not think anyone is really sure of its applicability in cases other than the alleged collusive situation represented in the cement industry.

Spokesmen for the Department of Justice told us at a recent hearing that there is a case now pending before the Supreme Court which would place the issue squarely in focus, the Rigid Steel Conduit case. When that decision may be handed down no one really knows.

Meanwhile, however, there is pending before the Subcommittee on Trade Practices of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce S. 236, introduced by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], chairman of the subcommittee and also chairman of the parent committee, which seeks to meet the situation by legalizing certain types of freight absorption which many businessmen think, perhaps, may have been outlawed by the decision in the Cement case. There have been some hearings on S. 236, and the chairman has notified us that a further hearing will be held tomorrow, and that that will be the last hearing.

The Johnson bill, S. 236, deals, admittedly, with a very complex issue. The bill itself is complex. The intent behind the bill is to clarify the situation and remove the uncertainties besieging so many businessmen whose firms follow a freight-absorption policy, and to permit them to continue to follow these policies without fear of being held in violation of the antitrust laws.

There is a strong desire on the part of proponents of this legislation for speed in its enactment. I am very much afraid, however, that unless we know exactly what we are dealing with in a matter like this, the speedy enactment of so-called corrective legislation might lead to much worse difficulties than the present uncertainty admittedly experienced by many business firms.

This is why I am introducing this bill. It takes the heat off business, those businesses following what most of us would regard as legitimate freight-absorption practices, it takes the heat off Congress and removes the necessity for hasty legislation which might boomerang on business or on a proper administration of the laws against monopoly and conspiracy.

The 2-year interval provided in this bill would give the Congress an opportunity to have all the facts at hand before drafting permanent legislation, if such permanent legislation is determined finally to be necessary. It will give the Supreme Court an opportunity to rule on the basing-point issue per se.

The bill provides in section 3 that nothing it contains shall affect any proceeding in any Federal court as of February 1, 1949, so that it would not act to prevent the courts from making a final determination on this basic and very fundamental issue.

When the decision comes down, we will then have for the first time—and I repeat that, it will be for the first time—an authoritative, reliable, clear-cut explanation of the applicability of the antitrust statutes to the whole freight-absorption practice.

During the 2-year moratorium provided in this bill on the application of antitrust laws to good-faith delivered-price systems, it may well be that the Congress may want to take a good look at our conglomeration of antimonopoly statutes, with a view toward tightening them up, eliminating the overlapping of agency functions, and otherwise streamlining our whole concept and application of the antitrust philosophy. But that is a long-range problem, and the one the Congress faces right now is an immediate one, the problem of eliminating uncertainty and confusion among businessmen who claim they have already sufficient other problems to keep them occupied without having to contend with possible prosecution under the antitrust statutes for what are generally regarded as legitimate business policies.

The Subcommittee on Trade Practices of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will, no doubt, come to a decision shortly in regard to the Johnson bill, S. 236. At our hearing tomorrow I intend to call attention to this bill I am introducing today as a suggested means of proceeding. I would much rather see any contrary provision of the antitrust laws waived for a period of 2 years—since we have gone along these many years safely enough under delivered-price systems—than to participate in the enactment of long-range legislation which may turn out to be either unnecessary or inadequate to cope with a situation which will arise some months from now when the Supreme Court acts.

This bill would say to the individual steel companies that they are not required to engage in an exclusively f. o. b. system. If the steel corporations were sincere, as they very well might have been, in adopting f. o. b. pricing out of self-defense, out of fear that any other system might subject them to violation of the antitrust laws, then this bill says to them that if the basing-point system is not collusive, if it is a good-faith delivered-price system designed to meet competition in distant markets, carried on independently and not through any combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act, then they can go back to their own independent delivered-price systems and know that they will not be slapped with an indictment or sued under the antitrust statutes.

If, on the other hand, the individual steel companies decided that this was a good pretext in a seller's market for raising their profits by eliminating freight-absorption costs, we shall know that, too.

If it is true, we certainly would know it. I think some of the steel companies were pretty coy about testifying on the issue even though it is one which affects them directly and intimately.

My mail reflects widespread concern from small- and medium-sized businesses in Pennsylvania over what they consider to be the denial of their right to compete in distant markets because of interpretations of the Cement case decision. My bill gives them the assurance they need that they do not have to revolutionize their method of doing business overnight; it assures them that if their present methods are subsequently found to be violations of the antitrust laws, they have 2 years from the date of the enactment of this bill to revise their procedures in order to comply with the law; it assures them that if the law is changed, it will be done only after careful study and complete understanding of the problem by Congress.

I ask that the bill be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1008) to provide a 2-year moratorium with respect to the application of certain antitrust laws to individual, good-faith delivered-price systems and freight-absorption practices, introduced by Mr. MYERS, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That because of widespread uncertainty resulting from recent administrative and judicial constructions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, and the Clayton Act, as amended, the Congress hereby declares that it is the sound and traditional policy of the United States that contracts, combinations, conspiracies, or monopolistic practices in restraint of trade are inimical to the public interest in maintaining a free, private, competitive enterprise system; but that it has not been the intent of the Congress to deprive individual companies of the right to use delivered-price systems or to absorb freight to meet competition in any or all markets, provided such activities are carried on independently and in good faith, and not through any combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act, as amended.

SEC. 2. Until the expiration of 2 years after the enactment of this act, the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, and the Clayton Act, as amended, shall not be construed as depriving individual companies, in the absence of conspiracy or combination or other agreement in restraint of trade, of the right to independently use delivered-price systems or to absorb freight to meet competition in any and all markets.

SEC. 3. Nothing herein contained shall affect any proceeding pending in any Federal court of the United States on February 1, 1949.

BASING-POINT PRICING

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, last November I addressed a letter to the Governor of Pennsylvania, the Honorable James H. Duff, asking for a report on the views of the State government or any of its agencies on the matter of basing-point pricing. My inquiry was inspired by a newspaper article quoting some informal comments of the Governor on the effects of the elimination of basing-point pricing on our industrial State.

The Governor subsequently sent me a very interesting letter outlining some of the aspects of this important matter as expressed to him by an industrial leader whose knowledge of the matter the Governor considered to be outstanding.

Since then I have been placed on the subcommittee investigating this matter. Because of the widespread interest in the whole matter of freight-absorption and delivered-price systems, I ask unanimous consent that for informational purposes my letter to the Governor and his reply to me may be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the correspondence referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

NOVEMBER 17, 1948.

Hon. JAMES H. DUFF,
Governor, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Harrisburg, Pa.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: One of the news services (the United Press) recently quoted you as expressing the belief that the Supreme Court decision in the so-called Cement case involving the use of basing-point pricing will be of great long-range benefit to Pennsylvania by inducing fabricators to move closer to their sources of steel. The article I read declared that in answer to a question as to whether Congress should legalize basing-point pricing, you said that you favored anything "that's good for Pennsylvania" but indicated you believed such action would be contrary to the State's best interests.

As you no doubt know, the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has undertaken an investigation by a subcommittee headed by Senator CAPEHART into this very issue. I am not a member of the subcommittee, but as a member of the parent committee, I have been sitting in from time to time at the hearings and have been seeking to determine the facts in this issue as they affect Pennsylvania. I was, therefore, quite interested in your reported views on this subject and would appreciate any material which you can have State agencies which may be studying the problem forward to me which will bear out the views attributed to you in this newspaper story.

The issue is very complex and is presently being subjected to a great deal of misinterpretation making for great confusion. I am primarily interested in the effect upon Pennsylvania industry of the Supreme Court decision, and although we are having a number of Pennsylvania businessmen appear before the subcommittee to give their views, I think it would be helpful if the State, as such, would submit a report for my review. If officials of any of the State agencies have any documented evidence bearing on the subject from the standpoint of the welfare of the State and of its industries, perhaps it might be advisable to arrange for such officials to appear as witnesses before the subcommittee.

Please feel free to call to my attention any relevant information on this matter which you or your administration may have. The important thing is that the interests of the people of our State be fully protected.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS J. MYERS,
United States Senate.

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Harrisburg, December 31, 1948.

Hon. FRANCIS J. MYERS,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Some time ago you wrote asking in a general way my attitude with reference to the basing-point problem. This subject, following the Cement decision, has excited such controversy, that I was anxious to sound out a number of industrialists in whose judgment I had confidence before replying specifically to the question to my appraisal of this situation.

I should say that the following fairly represents what I take to be a sound industrial thinking in this Commonwealth, that is that the effect of the recent decisions in the long run will be harmful to the American economy and national security.

I am quoting one opinion expressed to me which I believe may be said to be a representative opinion as follows:

"These decisions leave most of American industry in a position of uncertainty where, to avoid possible severe penalties, they must adopt conservative pricing policies, i. e., they must sell their products at uniform f. o. b. mill prices. This is a severe handicap in the competitive marketing of their goods and products. We believe that remedial legislation which would establish the rules of the game for competitive-pricing policies is essential for maximum industrial health in this country.

"We firmly believe that what is good for all of the American economy is, in the long run, good for any particular segment of it. One locality or one industry might easily achieve a short-range advantage at the expense of others. We believe that, in the long run, this is bad, not only for the whole economy but also for the particular segment that gets the short-range advantage.

"From the long-range point of view, industry of all kinds needs a maximum of freedom to meet competition. Such a maximum of freedom will keep industry on its toes, alert and vigorous.

"As a short-range proposition, we could press for the relocation of fabricating industries in the Pittsburgh area in order to obtain a surety of outlets for our steel products. However, for maximum security, a business such as ours (and I believe this is true for other manufacturers) should have wide dispersion of its consumers and a reasonable diversity of products. This is true because, in times of slack business, all parts of the country are not slack simultaneously or, at least, they are not slack to the same degree and, also, all consumers of steel products are not slack to the same degree. Therefore, the more dispersion and diversity (within practical limits) the more security.

"In addition to the foregoing, the ability to meet competitive prices in various parts of the country permits us to shift the direction of our selling efforts with changes in concentrations of industry, shifts in populations, and new industrial developments.

"In other words, we want the right to compete by going into any part of the country with any of our products whenever we find it profitable to do so. We can do this only if we have the freedom to make competitive prices.

"The concentration of fabricating industries around centers of production of raw materials (such as steel) is not good from the national security standpoint, nor is it good from the sociological standpoint. The development of modern offensive weapons dictates the dispersions of industries and, more important, the dispersions of people for maximum national security.

"In summary, I believe that within the boundaries fixed by our antitrust laws which prohibit collusion, conspiracy, and stifling of competition by unfair trade practices, industry should have the maximum of freedom to establish prices which it deems right and proper to meet competition.

"In reply to your question as to the desirable time element in obtaining a clarification of the law with respect to the rights of industry to compete pricewise, it is my firm belief that much harm will be done, particularly to small business and especially to those small businesses which have only one plant, if the present situation is allowed to drift into a period of slack business. Therefore, I believe that the sooner we have remedial legislation the better.

"While the change in the basis of distribution might force a greater concentration of fabricators in Pennsylvania, it would be many years before such a concentration would absorb a productive class in our territory.

"In such a critical period as this both from an economic and military standpoint, it appears to me that a strict interpretation of this might prove extremely ill advised."

This is for your information in relation to your inquiry.

With best regards.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES H. DUFF.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no reports of the committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Frank C. Bingham, of Alaska, to be United States attorney for division No. 2, district of Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Harry O. Arend, of Alaska, to be United States attorney for division No. 4, district of Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of George L. Grobe, of New York, to be United States attorney for the western district of New York.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Alfred J. Plowden, Jr., of South Carolina, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Kehoe C. Shannon, of Texas, to be United States marshal for the western district of Texas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed; and, without objection, the President will be immediately notified in all cases.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM AND ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY

The Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Senate will immediately adjourn over till Monday, and, I may say, there will be no measures of any controversial importance to be taken up by the Senate when it convenes on Monday. However, we will call the calendar. I make the announcement now in order that Senators may have an opportunity to read the RECORD and to be apprised of that fact.

If there is no further business to be considered, I now move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 21, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

---

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1949

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. Father Louis W. Cheatham, St. Stephen's Roman Catholic Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God of majesty, creator and sustainer of life, before whom we all bow in profound adoration, graciously accept our humble plea that this day we may obtain Thy enlightenment to discern truth and Thy inspiration to exercise good. Assist these Thy public servants, here assembled in noble body, to voice the sentiments of high-minded citizens, whose special office it is to safeguard this Nation's security and its people's high ideals.

As official representatives of these United States, impart to them, O Lord, in Thy bountiful goodness, the firm impression of their sacred duty to God, to man, and to country. Instill in their minds the lofty principles of Christian life, that they may shine as a beacon before men, governing all decisions by God-fearing prudence and wisdom.. Implant in their hearts an unswerving determination to serve the common good of their country with wise forethought, zealous care, and enduring loyalty.

With full acknowledgment of their dependence on Thee, O God of love, we invoke Thy holy name with reverence and awe, and beseech Thee to replenish their souls with Thy heavenly gifts, that in the pursuance of their grave tasks they may engender new hope in the hearts of all men who crave a world of peace and harmony.

Suppliantly, therefore, we look to Thee for divine strength and guidance to uphold Thy standards of justice and charity; and in so doing to counteract the despotic hand of atheism and tyranny that everywhere seems to threaten our democratic mode of life.

Almighty God, permeate this select group with the holy inspiration to seek the accomplishment of Thy will in all things, that through their stanch efforts our country might flourish with new vigor of spirit, as the champion of man's God-given freedom and human rights.

O Father of lights, these blessings we implore Thee to grant this august body through the mediation of Thy well-beloved Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Hawks, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech by Hon. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR., in Huntington, W. Va.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances, and in each case to include extraneous matter.

Mr. HAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. POTTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech by Gen. Omar Bradley.

Mr. HORAN (at the request of Mr. POTTER) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. JAVITS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

A CITIZEN'S ARMY

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, last evening I had the privilege of hearing Brig. Gen. C. T. Lanham speak at the small-business banquet. We, who as Americans, are interested in a citizen rather than a professional army and who have often been troubled over what we have felt to be the attitude of the brass-hats, shall be able to feel that there is a new spirit moving among them.

Many in the large audience agreed that they had never heard so fine a portrayal of the ideals and the imperative central force of an army from any Army man.

It is not the same kind of citizen's army as we had in the early days of our national life, but an army that thinks of the men that compose it as citizens first and soldiers second. It should be the kind of an army that we, as Americans, can feel it is a citizen's army in the deepest sense of the term.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend General Lanham's speech in the Appendix of the RECORD, and hope every member of this House will read it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Ohio has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELLIOTT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. BATTLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. YOUNG asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. JACOBS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter addressed by him to Mr. Charles E. Wilson, of the General Electric Co., in answer to an 18-item questionnaire.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and insert editorials from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and the Paris Post-Intelligencer.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HUBER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a news release from the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Mr. CHURCH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech made by DeWitt Emery, president of the National Small Business Men's Association.

LOS ALAMOS PROJECT

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 54) to retrocede to the State of New Mexico exclusive jurisdiction held by the United States over lands within the boundaries of the Los Alamos project of the United States Atomic Energy Commission.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand that this land was previously owned by the State of New Mexico.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is correct to say New Mexico had jurisdiction over the land.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Did the United States Government pay any money when it acquired that property?

Mr. MURDOCK. I think not, as it was probably public domain. However, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. FERNANDEZ] may be able to answer that better.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. When the United States acquired this land, did they pay any money to the State of New Mexico for it?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. No. They paid no money to the State of New Mexico. The money was paid to the owners of the property.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Then the Government actually did pay the money?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much is involved?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I do not know about the price of the land. It varied according to the land, I suppose, I do not know. I do not think that is involved here. I do not quite follow the gentleman's question.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Well, if the United States Government is giving New Mexico land for which they paid a substantial sum of money, I simply wanted to know it.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Let me explain to the gentleman, we are not giving any land to the State of New Mexico. These are the particulars in the case: At the present time part of the land where the community of Los Alamos is located is under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. Part of the land is in the exclusive jurisdiction of the State government. That has created a good deal of confusion in the administration of the laws.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The title to the land does not change?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. The title to the land does not change at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You are simply changing it back to New Mexico so that the civil law can prevail?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. That is correct, and in order that the legislature may have the right to legislate over that community. The reason for the haste is this: The State legislature is now in session. It will adjourn the first week in March——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, the consent calendar will be called on next Monday.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. But this has to go through the Senate as well. They are contemplating some legislation, I understand, which will permit the community of Los Alamos, a community of eight or ten thousand population, to organize as a municipality. Of course, there is the question of elective franchise and the right to vote and other privileges that attach to citizens, which they do not now have. But the main reason for haste is that the legislature is now in session, and we should have this bill passed before they adjourn. If the legislature wants to enact legislation to permit that community to incorporate as a municipality, it may do so only after the State acquires jurisdiction. At the present time it has no jurisdiction over part of the community.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is merely a jurisdictional proceeding?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Purely that.

Mr. MURDOCK. May I say further, this bill was reported out unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands. The ranking minority member has been consulted, and, of course, is agreeable to the presentation of this bill, as well as the Speaker, the majority leader, and the minority leader. It was requested by the Atomic Energy Commission; it has the approval of the Members of Congress from New Mexico, and it does not involve any money.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to find out if the Federal Government paid good hard cash for this land and it is going to be returned to your State. Certainly if that is the case, then the State of New Mexico will repay the Federal Government for the land if it is any way implicated that they take this land from the Federal Government.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. There is no land going back to the State of New Mexico. The Federal Government owns the land and will own the land under this bill. This bill only places the civil jurisdiction of the laws of the State of New Mexico applicable to the inhabitants of this particular land. In other words, there was a case there of a person living on part of this land who had brought proceedings for a divorce under the State law. The Supreme Court of the State of New Mexico ruled that the State court had no jurisdiction, because it had no jurisdiction over this particular land that was owned by the Federal Government. I think we did the same thing in connection with the airport over here in Virginia, to allow the law of Virginia to become applicable to the airport. This is only to allow the civil law to apply there.

Mr. RICH. Would it not be a good thing in New Mexico if we let New Mexico buy a lot of this land that the Government owns so that they will have something they can operate and they can call their own, instead of the Federal Government doing it?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, the Federal Government needs this land itself.

Mr. RICH. Oh, we have got more land in New Mexico than the people have themselves.

Mr. McCORMACK. Not for this purpose.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object.

Mr. Speaker, there is one question I should like to have answered. As I understand it this land was acquired for experiments with the atomic bomb.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is right; it is under the jurisdiction of the Atomic Energy Commission, and they have requested this legislation.

Mr. RANKIN. The passage of this legislation will not in any way interfere with the Government carrying on future experiments there if they want to?

Mr. MURDOCK. In no way will it interfere; in fact, this legislation comes at the request of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article by Richard Luther.

Mr. GROSS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter from a constituent.

THE LATE WENDELL WILLKIE

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is the birthday of Wendell Willkie. He was born on February 18, 1892. I am inserting in the RECORD which will appear tomorrow an editorial from the Indianapolis News about Wendell Willkie, entitled, "The Torch Still Burns."

Mr. Speaker, today when we are struggling with the problem of civil rights, social-welfare legislation, and the effort to keep the world from being divided by violent war into two worlds instead of the one world which he conceived, the words of Wendell Willkie take on the same permanent and universal significance that we associate with the words of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Willkie said:

There are no distant points in the world any longer—our thinking in the future must be world-wide.

We must establish beyond all doubt the equality of men.

The world is awakening at last to the knowledge that the rule of people by other people is not freedom.

Freedom is an indivisible word—we must be prepared to extend it to everyone, whether they are rich or poor, whether they agree with us or not, no matter what their race or the color of their skin.

The only soil in which liberty can grow is that of a united people—we must have faith that the welfare of one is the welfare of all—we must acknowledge that all are equal before God and before the law.

The editorial I refer to follows:

[From the Indianapolis News of October 1946]

THE TORCH STILL BURNS

Two years ago, in the bright beauty of an October afternoon, Wendell Willkie came home to Indiana, to return to the rich earth from which he sprang. On a green hillside over which flamed the tapestry of October, the man whom Indiana gave to the world was laid to rest. On the place where he slept the leaves came drifting down from the hackberry and linden sentinels for his eternal rest.

The great voice that had been raised for freedom was still. But even death cannot quench a dream, and a flaming spirit lives beyond mortality. Wendell Willkie had fired the thoughts of men and touched their hearts, and the world picked up his torch. His words live and his dream moves on toward realization. Greatness does not die.

Symbolic recognition of that truth is afforded, as fully as can be expressed in stone, by the memorial that has just been placed at his grave. This is truly a shrine to freedom. It has the idealism of the cross, the sword of the spirit, the torch of humanity, the book of inspiration, and the laurel of victory.

It is the torch and the book that will carry the message of Wendell Willkie to those who come in the years ahead to the East Hill Cemetery in Rushville, there to pay homage to one who was a friend to all mankind. There is no fire in the granite torch. Rather the flame is in the words graven on the book that all may read as they rest and meditate. They are the words that were Mr. Willkie's creed:

"I believe in America because in it we are free—free to choose our government, to speak our minds, to observe our different religions.

"Because we are generous with our freedom, we share our rights with those who disagree with us.

"Because we hate no people and covet no people's lands.

"Because we are blessed with a natural and varied abundance.

"Because we have great dreams and because we have the opportunity to make those dreams come true."

Mr. Willkie lived those words, as all Americans should live them. And his heritage to his fellow countrymen is contained in these other lines on the book, taken from his speeches and One World:

"There are no distant points in the world any longer—our thinking in the future must be world-wide.

"We must establish beyond all doubt the equality of men.

"The world is awakening at last to the knowledge that the rule of people by other peoples is not freedom.

"Freedom is an indivisible word—we must be prepared to extend it to everyone, whether they are rich or poor, whether they agree with us or not, no matter what their race or the color of their skin.

"The only soil in which liberty can grow is that of a united people—we must have faith that the welfare of one is the welfare of all—we must acknowledge that all are equal before God and before the law.

"Only the productive are strong, only the strong are free.

"It is inescapably true that to raise the standard of living of any man anywhere in the world is to raise the standard of living by some slight degree of every man, everywhere in the world.

"Whenever we take away the liberties of those whom we hate we are opening the way to loss of liberty for those we love.

"The moral losses of expediency always far outweight the temporary gains.

"The test of a people is their aim and not their color."

Those words still speak to a world that has yet to know their full meaning. They are as true as the ages. And as long as there are living men to read them, and warm hearts to respond, the spirit of Wendell Willkie will endure. His torch still burns.

THE ADMINISTRATION PROGRAM

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the President says we must have $4,000,000,000 in new taxes.

Yesterday's paper says:

Boost in tax levies a must, Speaker RAYBURN declares. Four-billion-dollar increase needed to keep Government our of red, he says.

Today the Secretary of the Treasury said we need $4,000,000,000 in taxes.

Is there not somebody in high Government places who is going to say we want to cut down Government spending? Let some one Democrat get some economy in his system. Or are you going to take on this Truman giveaway plan: Bigger old-age pensions, more pay for the idle, to have the Government pay the medicine bill, permanent pay for the sick, Federal aid for the schools, electric power at less than cost, new dams at less than cost, bigger Government aid in the West, bigger Government subsidies, higher wages, and lower prices. For goodness sake, let us get a little common sense into Government and cut the cost of Government.

Stop squandering, stop spending, stop giving our resources away and you will stop taxing. Our people are tired of taxes; our people want economy in Government; I want economy in Government. The way to get it is stop spending. Stop spending and you stop taxing, Mr. Speaker.

THE VETERANS' PENSION BILL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I see a hideous cartoon of myself in this morning's Washington Post—the uptown edition of the Communist Daily Worker.

You will remember that we chased some of the Communists off the editorial staff of that publication; but they still have a Communist cartoonist.

This publication is doing more to stir race trouble here in Washington than all other forces combined, by its communistic propaganda for wiping out all race segregation and forcing Negroes into the white hotels and white schools of the District of Columbia. Of course they don't give a tinker's dam about the Negroes. They just want to harass the white gentiles of America and force their communistic program on them. But when you turn the spotlight on them they whine "race prejudice."

They do not want our aged veterans taken care of, as this bill provides, for fear it might cost them a few of their ill-gained dollars.

I filed a resolution for a rule on this bill, and I am going to press it as hard as I can. I want to bring this measure to the floor of the House as quickly as possible.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES] on yesterday got excited, and you would have thought from his speech that we were going to break the Government with this bill.

Why, the bill he voted for last year known as the Marshall plan, which was really the Bevin plan, would send to Europe tobacco alone costing ten times as much as this soldiers' pension bill would cost the first year.

The gentleman from Wisconsin can take that side of the question if he wants to—and any of the rest of you can do likewise; but I am not going to let these old veterans, who served their country in time of war, go to the poorhouse in their declining days if I can help it.

If we can spend untold billions of dollars on other countries—as I said, feeding and clothing every lazy lout from Tokyo to Timbuktu—then we can take care of our aged veterans when they get beyond the age of their earning capacity, and are unable to care for themselves.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

EXPORT CONTROL ACT OF 1949

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 97 and ask for its immediate consideration.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. If we are going to legislate, let us have the Members present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

[Roll No. 16]

| | | |

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-two Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

REREFERENCE OF BILL

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, by inadvertence, the bill (H. R. 1376) to provide assistance to farmers in securing farm housing and other farm buildings, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture. I have conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from further consideration of the bill and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes on Monday next, following the legislative business of the day and any special orders heretofore entered for this day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MADDEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Gary Post-Tribune.

Mr. THOMPSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an address by the national president of the Marine Corps Reserve Officers' Association.

Mr. HÉBERT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial and excerpts.

Mr. TRIMBLE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "Annual Madison County Soil Conservation District," notwithstanding the fact that the Government Printing Office estimates the cost will be $230.75.

Mr. HARRISON asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include sundry editorials.

Mr. GARMATZ asked and was granted permission to include his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article from the New York Times.

Mr. KENNEDY and Mr. MILLER of Nebraska asked and were granted permission to extend their remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD regarding a bill he will today introduce.

Mr. POULSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. SANBORN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith the Sixty-fifth Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission. This report covers the fiscal year ended June 30, 1948.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 17, 1949.

EXPORT-CONTROL ACT OF 1949

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 97 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1661) to provide for continuation of authority for the regulation of exports, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, after I conclude my remarks I shall yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. Speaker, several Members have accused me of being responsible for bringing them here this morning by making a point of order that a quorum was not present. I did not make the point of order, but it will not hurt the Members to remain here during the consideration of the bill, especially since it is being considered under the 5-minute rule.

The rule is an open one and provides for 2 hours general debate, after which the bill will be taken up and read under the 5-minute rule for the offering of amendments. It might be well for all of the Members to remain here at that time in order to gain information about the provisions of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the bill is relative to the control of the exportation of products that are vital to the Nation's internal economy as well as to its external security. It provides for the continuation of the President's authority to control this vital link in the chain of the Nation's welfare.

The effect of the legislation will be to safeguard the supply of many of the materials needed by our own country. It is true that it controls the export of goods both to friendly and to so-called unfriendly nations. In this way, it serves a twofold purpose. In the first place, our domestic situation is strengthened, especially through the curbing of inflationary tendencies caused by foreign demand. And in regard to our security, the program will act as a two-edged sword; we can limit the flow of goods to nations that we suspect are unfriendly and we can see to it that the goods we send to the friendly nations do not find their ultimate destination in the hands of our potential enemies. In the past, many valuable materials that have been exported, and even donated, to our friends have found their way to countries that are not so friendly. Even some of the so-called friendly nations are not so friendly. At any rate, I hope that those countries that have engaged in unfair tactics in the past will cease doing so in the future. Nevertheless, the situation is such that our reliance should be placed at home. Thus, we are giving this power to the President.

The people of the country have confidence in the judgment of the President; they have confidence that he has the welfare of the United States uppermost in his mind, first, last, and always. They know that his sane, common sense will safeguard their interests and the interests of our country, seeing to it that scarce materials will not, by devious means, find their way to undesirable destinations. To those that decry the centralization of authority, it may be stated that the situation is a swiftly changing one, with the need for rapid action. Central authority is imperative. Furthermore, the President will be apprised of all the facts through his advisors in the various departments concerned. The action of the President will prove beneficial to American manufacturers, who, in the future, will not be faced with the severe shortages of the past. It may be noted that many manufacturers were obliged to suspend operations due to manipulations on the part of the trusts. They were not able to obtain steel and other necessary materials.

Of course this matter was exploited by my Republican friends. Yesterday, three of them arose and claimed, with a great deal of glee, that we are facing a recession. Well, my friends, that just isn't true. The country is prosperous and will continue to be prosperous and the people will continue to be employed.

Yes, we have a little unemployment. We know that from 8 to 10 percent of our employable people ordinarily are unemployed during peacetimes. Now we have over 58,000,000 people employed, and they will continue to be employed if we retain the raw materials that are needed for production, as contemplated in this bill. Some gentlemen say there are nearly 2,000,000 unemployed. Well, that is not even a quarter of what we ordinarily have in peacetimes, percentagewise. Actually, it may be said that there is no unemployment. Look at the newspapers here, in New York, in Chicago, and in every other city and you will find page after page of help wanted, labor wanted, manpower wanted. There is a demand for more labor, and everybody who desires to work may find employment, and I hope at good wages. Shortly, we will pass the minimum wage bill and that will encourage still greater employment.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I do not oppose the rule making in order the consideration of H. R. 1661, a bill introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] to enact a law for the regulation of exports, and for other purposes, under a 2-hour general debate clause.

I do not oppose the rule because I believe that some sort of legislation to continue export controls is absolutely necessary at this time.

A short time ago I spoke on the floor of the House and perhaps criticized just a little bit some of my friends on the majority side because, while they had been very loud and long in their criticisms of the Eightieth Congress, they had brought in a number of bills which extended legislation that had been passed by the Congress which they have criticized, the Republican Eightieth Congress. They had reenacted legislation which they had opposed and had criticized at the time the Eightieth Congress enacted it into law.

Seemingly my friends of the majority took that criticism of mine to heart, because they have evidently decided that they would not extend the Republican-sponsored law for export control but instead would attempt to write a bill of their own, a substitute measure, as it were.

I hope the Members of the House will listen very carefully to the debate on the bill H. R. 1661 and the explanation of what this new law actually contains, because it goes much further as far as conferring power on the President is concerned than any export-control legislation which has ever been enacted by any Congress in the past. It goes so far as to permit the President or any person he may designate to go into the matter of financing exports, of transporting exports, and of servicing the goods that are shipped overseas. It goes even further than that. It provides that the veil of secrecy can be thrown about these activities, or that, in the discretion of an official, if any particular business or industrial secret should be made public for the benefit of some individual or some group or some organization, it can be done.

It permits the officials in charge of export controls to bring in any individual in the United States, regardless of whether or not that person has any connection whatsoever with the goods being exported, and swear that person and get all the information they want from him about that particular matter or any other matter that he may know something about.

In other words, this legislation is another step in conferring practically—well, let me say not dictatorial, but very, very broad powers on the Chief Executive. It is just another chapter, if you please, in the story of centralizing all power and authority in the Government here in Washington.

Those of you who are interested in the welfare of your own industries and your own districts had better look at this piece of legislation rather carefully and listen to the explanations and give serious consideration to some of the amendments that will be offered during the consideration of the bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

May I also add that perhaps it might be wise for our friends of the majority to be giving just a little bit of consideration to import controls as well as to export control legislation, because if the present trend continues it will not be long until many of us here will be seriously concerned with the heavy flow of imports which are coming into this country. I know that in the report on this bill reference is made to the increase in production in foreign countries in many commodities.

I am not unmindful of something that happened in my own State in the last 2 weeks. Up in the great city of Cleveland bids were opened for the purchase of generating equipment to make electricity for that great city, a city of over one million souls.

The low bidder was a Swiss concern with a bid more than a half million dollars below the lowest bid made by any American manufacturer for the same identical equipment, with the result that the workers in the electrical factory in Switzerland will be employed while the workers in some of the electrical factories in America are being laid off. I have every respect and every regard for the distinguished Member from the State of Illinois, my chairman [Mr. SABATH]. Yet as I heard him speak, I could not help but wonder just where he has been recently. Certainly he has not been in the great State of Illinois. Certainly he has not been back home, or he would have found out very quickly that there is unemployment—growing unemployment in the city of Chicago to such an extent, by the way, that it is giving grave concern to his own city and State officials.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SADLAK. I am positive that the gentleman from Illinois was not in the State of Connecticut.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am sure that the gentleman has been in the never-never land if he still believes that we have expanding employment in this country and that there is a great shortage of workers. If the gentleman from Illinois has all these positions and jobs available that he has been talking about, I believe many Members of the House could give him names of many, many individuals who have been writing, asking them to help them get employment.

We have even had much correspondence from our own State governments asking for help from the Government in the way of additional employees to process unemployment compensation applications. The House by a motion made by the majority on yesterday adopted an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill to more than double, as I remember it, the funds to be used for the employment of additional workers in these unemployment compensation offices out in the States, just so that we can take care of the unemployed.

But the gentleman from Illinois insists here in a pious way that such unemployment does not exist at all. The statements made here by the gentleman from Illinois will not help to feed the families of the unemployed in this country or in his district.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Is the gentleman from Ohio referring to the unemployed among Republicans who have been holding sinecure positions in the formerly Republican state governments? There is certainly unemployment there, of course.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, there is a rather strange thing about public employment. Whenever they do get a really difficult or knotty problem in government, whether it be in the States or in the national government, they always turn to some Republican to solve that problem for them. They have to go where they can to find the ability to do the job. I might add that that seems to apply at every point in our public service, even in the military and naval branches of the Government. I am simply amazed that the gentleman from Illinois would stand in the Well of the House and attempt to tell the Congress and the country that there is not a growing unemployment problem. It is a serious problem. It is one that gives grave concern to every thinking American. I am satisfied it is giving grave concern to the leaders of this Administration—to the President of the United States and to those who advise him—because I understand from rather reliable sources, I may say to the gentleman from Illinois, that plans are already rather well developed for a new type of WPA program. I hope it is not leaf raking. I hope, if we have to do something for the unemployed in this country as a result of the economic and Government mistakes in the past, that what we will do will be constructive. I hope we will not waste our substance on leaf raking and or doles, but instead that the men and women we must aid will have their efforts directed in a constructive way, so that they themselves may pay their own way and feel that they are contributing to the welfare of their Nation and of their community.

I hope that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] will understand that as unemployment grows—and it is growing in the State of Illinois and in the city of Chicago—we will have great sympathy for him and great concern for those individuals out there who have lost their jobs, and that we will join him in doing everything we can to help them, because he will find they are unable to eat speeches made on the floor of the House and they are unable to live on the statistics put out by prejudiced persons and individuals; that, instead, they will need actual help, not only from the Government, but from every other decent-thinking American citizen who wants to see this economy of ours remain strong and safe and sound so that America may be, after all, a strong influence in the world for peace and for prosperity. I hope the gentleman will let us know just what his solution is to continue such high employment in his State.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], relative to unemployment in Illinois, I have been requested to yield 5 minutes to a gentleman who is familiar with labor conditions in Chicago.

I yield 5 minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BUCKLEY].

Mr. BUCKLEY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we are catering to a program of fear. Illinois, as such, has no worry about unemployment. They have in the past and shall continue in the future to take care of their own problems. Perhaps the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] should concern himself more with the problems in his own State.

I, for one, am getting tired of hearing this talk about a depression and the unemployment that usually follows. The Republican minority is attempting to drive a sense of fear and insecurity into the American people merely because the will of the mass of Americans manifested itself in the last election—and the Democrats were justifiably victorious. Of course, the only thing that the American people have to fear is fear itself. If certain Members of Congress, and others, continue harping on the coming of a depression, they will have their wish. They will succeed—if they continue—by striking fear into the hearts of the American people. The result will be a curtailment in buying, and the logical cutback in production that necessarily follows, with the end result leading to unemployment. When this occurs the Republicans will be exceedingly happy, because it was the Eightieth Republican Congress that attempted to start this vicious economic process.

I firmly believe that there is no reason for such talk today, because we are merely in the process of a peacetime adjustment to our hard-fought victory in the last war. I do not think that it is proper for a Member of Congress to stand up in the House of Representatives and alarm the people by telling them that they are facing a panic or depression. The only motive behind these unwarranted and unjustifiable cries of "slump and depression" is one of delay in order to hamper labor unions who will be seeking new contracts shortly. It is merely a scheme on the part of Republicans to preclude the laboring people from asking for a fourth round of wage increases.

The future outlook is bright. We have great employment in the United States today. Whatever slowing down happens to exist in the employment situation as it occurs today results normally when new labor contracts are being negotiated, and management acts cautiously.

Thank God that we in America are wise enough and courageous enough to have such a great administration and such a truly great leader as the President of the United States. We all have confidence in him. He will, with God's Providence and the aid of the Democratic Eighty-first Congress, dispel all fears of depression and unemployment, to the end that the people of America and their Nation will again be sound and solvent as they have been in the past under Democratic leadership.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAVALCANTE].

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Speaker, I have merely asked for this time in order to obtain information to clear my mind on the conditions of this bill and also to guide me in the manner that I should vote.

Some days ago we passed a bill pertaining to reciprocal trade agreements. I should like to have my mind cleared on the proposition of whether the provisions of those reciprocal trade agreements were excepted from the provisions of the bill which will be made in order by this rule? I may state that I agree with the principle of export control of short supply materials. I also believe in conferring the power to control upon the President. It is because of this that I am concerned in knowing whether the short supply materials that we are here trying to conserve by the provision of this bill may not be exported under the powers conferred a few days ago upon the President by the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill is one that the individual Members of the House are going to regret very seriously if it is put on the statute books as it comes to us. It is one of the largest abdications of legislative responsibility since the Blue Eagle Act. I wish you would read the declaration of policy contained in section 2. It is so broad that it covers every piece of export business that can be done in the entire United States in any commodity whatever. Subsection (b) of section 2, the policy section, includes, as policy, the objective:

> To further the foreign policy of the United States and to aid in fulfilling its international responsibilities—

That is just as broad as the world is wide. It covers everything without limit. Under the authority to carry out that policy contained in section 2, under section 3 this can be done—

To the extent necessary to achieve effective enforcement of this act, such rules and regulations may apply to the financing, transporting, and other servicing of exports and the participation therein by any person—

In other words, in that sentence you do away with or make it possible to change or abolish practically all of the rules and regulations in the transporting and the financing agencies of the United States by giving the power to the President to assign even greater powers to other agencies or officials; and in the last phrase it grants the power to not only completely control the exporters but also to say who can do the exporting, the financing, the transporting, and the servicing, all of which can permit rank political favoritism in the granting of permits and licenses; and there is a penalty provision attached to this bill embracing imprisonment for 1 year, or a $10,000 fine, or both, for violation of a rule or regulation promulgated by an official of the Government.

In the concluding portion of the bill it is stated:

This act shall not supersede any other act.

We have of course a number of acts on the statute books today that are for the purpose of controlling exports; but what this bill means is that in negotiations under the present trade treaty acts you are going to give the President authority to agree with other countries to establish domestic export quotas, or they can just be established. That will mean a complete violation of the freedom in commerce which our country has enjoyed, except in war, since the beginning. It will give, at the same time, free rein to the President to engage in commercial warfare through the export quota system. This is the system applied by authoritarian countries. In other words, instead of this great freedom of trade we have been hearing about in the reciprocal trade agreements debates, we are now about to tie up trade so that nobody can operate except those favored by the administration. The reciprocal trade agreements will not mean anything. You will find that we are going to operate very much as the Nazi and some other European governments operated before the war. We had better be looking forward to freeing the channels of trade and not tying them up, if we want to uphold the great principles of our country.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Referring to the gentleman's statement concerning the declaration of policy, I may say to the gentleman that in the hearings before the committee evidence was produced that this bill was necessary, according to its proponents, to protect the domestic economy from excessive drain. The latter two provisions of the declaration were not given much consideration, whether or not it is necessary to further the foreign policy of the United States and whether it is necessary to conserve the security of the United States, so some of us have had great concern about the continuation of a permanent policy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman that excessive drain can be stopped by cutting back on gifts to foreign countries, and that so far as the national defense is concerned, I believe it is adequately protected by other law at the present time in existing statutes which may be extended. As a member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy I know there is plenty of law in the Atomic Energy Act to protect the United States in those respects if it is properly exercised. But to put in this subsection (b), which says, "To further the foreign policy of the United States and to aid in fulfilling its international responsibility," is to grant the most extraordinary power in words just as wide open for interpretation as anything that was ever written into any law or statute of the United States. You can interpret those words to cover any sin or any objective that anyone in authority may want to cover. It vitiates entirely any other limitations that there may be in the bill.

The last subsection, the words "to exercise the necessary vigilance over exports from the standpoint of their significance to the national security," no one will argue with; but that subsection (b) of the policy section is a dilly. May I tell the Members of the House of Representatives that after this act is passed you are going to have everybody in your district coming down here and asking you to go to the Export Control Office to assist them in getting licenses for exports. It will be reflected in less employment in the exporting industries as the direct result of the complicated red tape and licenses required which will disgust the producers of exportable products. It will stifle small producer exports. I am in favor of freeing the mechanics of foreign trade and not tying them up as this bill will do under the regulations that will be issued pursuant to it.

(Mr. SPENCE asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he will make in the Committee on the bill under consideration and include a report.)

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1661) to provide for continuation of authority for the regulation of exports, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1661, with Mr. HUBER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 12 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it seems that the prologue to every bill in the House continuing an authority that already exists is an acrimonious political discussion. It is true that the authority that is given the President under this bill was continued by the Eightieth Congress, but the authority originally was given to the President more than 8 years ago. On July 2, 1940, the President was given practically the same powers that are given to him under this bill, and he has retained those powers ever since. Why is it now, in this Democratic Congress, that they have great apprehension on the other side as to the use of these powers? I know the gentlemen on the other side have not really gotten over the effects of the last election, and I suppose that is natural. But the Bible says:

Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.

And I think really there has been too much boasting on the other side, and that they could have foreseen what might have happened to them, for the prophets of old said that "Pride goeth before destruction, and the haughty spirit before the fall." The Prince of Peace said, "The meek shall inherit the earth." And, of course, it has been demonstrated that those that are not meek inherit nothing.

I hope my friends on the other side will read the Good Book and obtain lessons from it. Why should we not give the President these powers? We are not in normal times. Times have not been normal since 1940, when he was given these powers. I do not think it would be good policy for this Government to put shackles on the President in the exercise of these powers, with their international implications. He is dealing with the governments of the world. He is protecting the economy of the United States. In these highly important international affairs he ought to have the same powers granted him as the free elected Executive of a free nation, by free representatives elected by the people, as the executive or dictator has in representing the enslaved people in totalitarian governments. We have got to trust these powers to somebody, and to limit them and restrict them by unnecessary conditions would weaken the very purpose for which they are given to him.

We know what happened before the last war and before this war. I do not say that the great industrial people of the United States are willing to sacrifice their country for profit, but you know and I know that the scrap piles of America disappeared just before we went into the war with Japan. They disappeared because a profitable market was found in which to sell them. Those things were converted into munitions of war, and caused the death of our boys, no doubt about that.

We do not want that to happen again. The only way we can do that is by restricting exports. There is a short supply of many essential materials, and unless these things that are essential to our own welfare and to our domestic economy are controlled, the inflationary impact of abnormal foreign demand might be destructive of our interests.

We must have authority to control the quantitative amount of exports and to control the destination of these things, and they can be controlled.

Why should you have any apprehension, why should you be so captious about a few words that are in this bill? The President can delegate these powers to any department, agency, or official. I have heard objections made to the word "official." The President has transferred them to an official. He has not transferred the powers to an agency or a department. He has transferred these powers and invested them in the Secretary of Commerce and that, it seems to me, is where they ought to go. He centralizes the responsibility, and he makes it incumbent upon one man to discharge the duties he has imposed upon him.

A great deal of criticism has been made about the word "financing." That does not apply to power that can regulate how exporters shall obtain their money, it merely is an enforcement provision. When an exporter wants a license to ship certain things abroad, the best information the Government can obtain in regard to that license is through him who finances the exporter. He usually knows the amount of the goods that are going to be sent, the consignee, and the ability of the exporter, and it is only to that extent that this word "financing" is placed in this bill. It is an enforcement power that is absolutely essential to carry out the act in the way it should be carried out.

There is a great deal of misapprehension as to the words "standards and criteria." Why should there not be standards and criteria, to give to the exporter knowledge of just what his rights are?

The administration itself has placed this limitation upon it by the formulation of standards and criteria, criteria as to price, destination, end use, and so forth.

In connection with enforcement I remember there was one case where an exporter received an export license to transport glass vials. They found after investigation that the vials contained very expensive drugs which were not mentioned in the application for export. You must have the information if you are going to properly administer this law and you have to get the information from every reliable source from which it can be obtained. You need not have any apprehension about the administration of this act because the President has had practically all these powers under the original act. So it is but a continuation for 2 years of the powers that are now vested in him for a most essential purpose, a purpose that affects not only our domestic economy, but our foreign relations and our national security because it is worked in connection with the foreign-aid plan.

Unless we have some such licensing control as this, we cannot effectively carry out that plan.

Under leave to insert the committee report on this bill, I herewith insert House Report No. 18:

EXPORT CONTROL ACT OF 1949

Mr. SPENCE, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1661) to provide for continuation of authority for the regulation of exports, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with amendments and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendments are as follows:

1. In section 2 strike out "fulfill" and insert in lieu thereof "to aid in fulfilling."

2. In section 3 (a) strike out "carriage" where it appears therein and insert in lieu thereof "transporting."

3. In section 4 (a) immediately following the word "department" strike out "or" and insert a comma; and immediately following the word "agency" insert ", or official."

4. In the last sentence of section 4 (b) immediately following the word "agency" insert ", or official."

5. In the second sentence of section 6 (a) immediately following the word "court" where such word first appears in said sentence insert "of the United States."

6. In the first line of section 6 (c) immediately following the word "department" strike out "or" and insert a comma; and immediately following "agency" in said line insert ", or official."

7. In section 8 immediately following the word "agency" insert ", or official"; and at the end of said section insert a period.

8. In the second sentence of section 11 immediately following "delegations," insert "rules."

GENERAL STATEMENT

Export controls are being used at the present time to accomplish three important objectives: cushioning the domestic economy from the inflationary impact of foreign demand; influencing the geographic distribution of such quantities of scarce materials as can reasonably be spared from our economy; and exercising the necessary vigilance of exports of industrial commodities significant from the standpoint of the security of the United States.

The bulk of our merchandise in export has not been in short-supply commodities. Only about one-fourth of these exports has been in commodities for which quantitative export control is deemed necessary. Within this relatively limited sphere it has been desirable to temper the inflationary impact of foreign demand. This has been accomplished by limiting the quantities of scarce materials permitted to leave this country and, where feasible, by disqualifying export transactions made at excessively high prices. The supplies of these materials available for domestic use have been sufficient to permit a steadily increasing level of output and consumption in the United States.

Through export controls geographic distribution of commodities has been affected to channel exports into friendly countries, notably those participating in the European recovery program. For instance, in the first 6 months of 1948 uncontrolled exports amounted to $4,850,328,000, of which only 25 percent, or $1,211,056,000, went to European recovery-program countries. However, in the same period, controlled exports amounted to $1,643,210,000, of which over 59 percent, or $977,484,000, went to European recovery-program countries. It is evident that export controls are acting as an effective instrument in assisting the European recovery program.

The imposition of strict controls over shipments to eastern Europe has reduced exports to that area from an annual rate of $400,000,000 in the second quarter of 1947 to an annual rate of only $125,000,000 in the third quarter of 1948. For purposes of export control to eastern Europe, commodities have been classified in descending order of importance from the viewpoint of national security—ranging from materials and equipment which are of direct military significance, or basic importance in the manufactures of the nations, or of great strategic significance from an over-all industrial point of view, to the relatively nonessential commodities which are in abundant supply in this country and which are of slight significance either to the basic industries or to the general economy of eastern Europe. In general, export licensing to eastern Europe has been most restrictive at the top of this scale and least restrictive at the bottom.

The Department of Commerce, under existing law, has been given the principal responsibility in the administration of export controls. In the administration of such controls the Department through its Office of International Trade obtains the counsel and assistance of other Government agencies through the mechanism of formal interdepartmental committees. This mechanism has been used to assure policy coordination of these controls. The Advisory Committee on Requirements has the general function of assuring a coordinated supply-requirements operation by relating estimates of material requirements to estimates of supply available from foreign and domestic sources, by formulating measures necessary to bring supply and demand more closely into balance, and by advising the Secretary of Commerce as to the relative importance of programs and projects competing for materials in short supply.

The rules and regulations governing export controls are published in the Federal Register, including the so-called positive list—the list of commodities requiring specific export licenses for all destinations. It is the practice of the Department of Commerce to publish the quotas for all controlled commodities to which they apply so that exporters may have, in advance, a general idea of the quantities they might individually be allowed to export. Such information, with detailed explanations for the use of the export trade, is published by the Department of Commerce in a quarterly, comprehensive export schedule, supplemented by current export bulletins. To assist in formulating procedures for the various commodities under control, the Department has accelerated and extended its trade-consultation activities. During the past quarter, formal conferences have been held with many different groups of businessmen concerned with the export of various commodities. In order to secure broad representation, the membership includes small, medium, and large firms; merchant exporters as well as producers; exporters in various regions of the country; and trade-association members as well as independents.

These commodity advisory committees have proved helpful in determining the most equitable methods of distributing limited quotas among exporters. These groups have concerned themselves with the following questions relating to quota distribution: The extent to which price criteria should be used; the proportion of the quota to be allotted between traditional exporters and newcomers; administrative techniques for identifying and eliminating applicants whose interest is purely speculative; and the extent to which foreign government recommendations should be followed in granting export licenses.

These trade advisory activities have yielded immediate and substantial benefits to the export trade community, and the Department has been assisted in the improvement of licensing procedures to meet the varying practical problems involved in the export of different commodities. The result has been not only to facilitate export transactions and shipments of commodities, but also to reduce substantially the administrative burden of licensing control.

At the beginning of 1948, there were 386 separate commodity classifications under export control. This compares with the more than 3,000 such classifications under export control during the war years. For the first 6 months of 1948 exports of commodities on the positive list amounted to $1,643,210,000, or approximately 25 percent of the total value of commodities exported amounting to $6,493,539,000. Major commodities under export control for supply reasons are discussed in the following paragraphs.

Steel

Because of the continuing steel shortages, virtually all steel products are under export control, a significant change from the situation in 1947, when less than half of the steel tonnage exported was under control. Shipments abroad hit a postwar peak in the second quarter of 1947, when they reached an annual rate of 6,900,000 tons or 10.7 percent of the supply. For the year 1947 as a whole, exports totaled 6,500,000 tons or 10.3 percent of the supply. In each quarter of 1948, the downward trend has continued. In the first quarter, exports were at an annual rate of 5,400,000 tons, or 8.3 percent of the supply; in the second quarter, 4,300,000 tons, or 6.7 percent of supply; in the third quarter, the annual rate of exports was down to less than 3,700,000 tons; and by the fourth quarter, the annual rate of exports was 3,300,000 tons, or 4.8 percent of the supply. For purposes of comparison, it may be noted that in the immediate prewar period, exports accounted for 7.6 percent of the supply.

The sharp increases in steel production abroad in 1948 contributed importantly to the reduction of foreign demand upon the United States. This is particularly true of the European recovery-program countries where most of the production increase was concentrated, and which before the war required little steel from the United States. For the most part, increased output abroad was used to satisfy indigenous needs, but a part was also used to fill demands in other countries. Exports of steel from the United Kingdom in 1948 were back to prewar levels, and exports from Belgium and Luxemburg, the chief competitors of the United States in the steel export field, were substantially above prewar.

Aside from the extension of export controls during 1948 to cover almost every form of steel exported from the United States, export licensing restrictions were tightened by reducing the validity period of outstanding licenses from 12 months to 6 months, and by requiring the use of an individual license application for each shipment of each steel product to each country of destination. In addition, the total export quotas established for each steel item under control were divided into fairly rigid subquotas for each country. These country quotas were determined after careful screening of requirements statements submitted by foreign governments and supplemented by United States embassies abroad. Some country quotas for some items were heavily oversubscribed, particularly, as in the case of Venezuela or South Africa, where ample dollar exchange was available and long-term market prospects are good; in no other cases, notably those involving countries of western Europe, the total volume of applications was smaller than the established quotas. The country quota system assists needy countries to obtain steel from United States suppliers by restricting exports to those markets which might otherwise tend to monopolize export tonnages.

An increased share of the steel exported from the United States in 1948 was destined for special-projects operations and activities abroad of such high importance to the United States as to merit special attention to their requirements for steel and other scarce materials. Roughly one-fourth of the total steel quotas were earmarked for these projects, most of which are owned or controlled by American interests. The bulk of the steel moving under special project license was used for petroleum operations abroad, in Venezuela and other countries of Latin America, and in the Middle and Far East. Smaller quantities were licensed for a number of mining operations engaged in the production of strategic and critical materials needed in the United States. Practically all of the casing and oil-line pipe and large portions of the unlined storage tanks, seamless black pipe, structural shapes, and reinforcing bars which were permitted for export were needed to maintain and expand these special-projects activities abroad.

Nonferrous metals

The nonferrous metals—copper, zinc, lead, tin, and aluminum—currently offer the most serious supply problems to the United States. The world-wide scarcity, the immediate needs of the strategic stock pile, the expanded military programs, the high level of domestic industrial activity, and continued foreign demands indicate that the shortage of nonferrous metals will not be overcome in the near future.

The United States has long been dependent on foreign sources to meet a large portion of its non-ferrous-metal requirements. The high level of consumption during the war and in the postwar period has increased this dependence. In recognition of our reliance on imports for these basic metals, the Department of Commerce has made special efforts to stimulate foreign production and increase the volume of shipments to the United States. The non-ferrous-mining operations in the Western Hemisphere are classified as special projects, and receive preference in the allocation for export of short-supply materials from the United States. Virtually all of the requirements of these operations for maintenance, repair, and operating supplies, as well as materials for new development and facilities, come from the United States.

The increasing pressure on non-ferrous-metal supplies during 1948 was reflected in a tightening of export controls. Aluminum plate, sheet, and strip were added to the positive list in August 1948 because of rapidly expanding domestic demand and a relatively high level of exports. The quotas which have been established for aluminum will result in a sharp decrease in the rate of exports. Quotas for other nonferrous metals were also reduced during the year.

The bulk of the exports of copper and zinc have consisted of refined copper and slab zinc produced from imported ores. Much of this material entered the United States for processing and reexport. Although licenses are required for these reexports, it has been the practice to permit comparatively free exports of products processed from imported ore. This policy has been adopted in order to stimulate the movement of ores to this country and to keep United States smelters operating at capacity.

Food

World supplies of cereals are becoming more adequate to meet the minimum requirements of all countries provided they would move into the channels of trade at the proper time and in fair proportions. Because of dollar shortages in most importing countries and price considerations in the exporting countries, these conditions would not be met without certain Government controls. Cereal grains and their products, excluding rice, are not presently controlled for export to the Western Hemisphere countries and the Philippines, licensing requirements having been suspended in the last half of 1948 after good harvests were assured and supplies from the new crops began to come to market. Shipments of wheat, wheat flour, oats, barley, and grain sorghums to Western Hemisphere countries and the Philippines were removed from export restrictions in August 1948. Export-license requirements for corn to these countries were continued until December 1948 in order to protect supplies from the poor crop of 1947 and until grain from the bumper crop of 1948 began to appear on the market. Export-license requirements for rye and rye flour were also continued until December because of the limited supplies of that crop in this country.

While world supplies of meat are only slightly below prewar, the decline has been substantial in the importing countries, and much of the increase in the exporting countries has been retained for domestic consumption. World requirements for meat are far in excess of available supplies, and the pressure of rising populations and the desirability of better living standards point to a continuation of the world shortage of meats for some time to come. In view of the tight meat situation, reflected in record prices in 1948, the Department of Commerce has controlled the exports of meat very carefully. Only token amounts have been allocated for export, and only a fraction of 1 percent of our supply was exported in 1948. A large share of the total allocations have been licensed to special projects, many of which produce critical materials which augment United States supplies. Latin America and the Philippines have been allotted the remainder, and the bulk of the shipments has consisted of pork.

The outlook for fats and oils supplies in 1949 is favorable. Indications are that large oilseed plantings will be made again this spring, and the spring pig crop is reported as 10 percent over the previous season's crop. With favorable weather conditions, a further easing of the fat situation can be expected, although supplies do not appear sufficient to meet total potential demand for both domestic and foreign needs. The improving fat situation in the United States is part of a general easing in the world shortage of fats and oils.

Textiles

Only a few textile items are under export control. Since output of raw cotton and cotton goods is ample to meet all domestic demands, and to provide a substantial surplus for export, these products are free of positive list control. Rayon and other synthetics are exempt from control for the same basic reason. In the case of wool, where the United States is dependent upon imports to meet a major part of its needs, controls are likewise unnecessary because of the general adequacy of world supply and because of the traditionally low level of export demand.

Positive list controls over textiles, are limited to fibers not produced in the United States—jute, manila, and sisal—and to their products, including binder and baler twine. In general, exports of these commodities were higher during 1948 than in the prewar period. As before the war, however, exports have been relatively unimportant in comparison with domestic consumption.

Building materials

Few building materials normally enter the export market to an appreciable extent. Controls, therefore, have been exercised on a selective basis, and materials have been removed from export control as rapidly as permitted by the underlying supply-demand situation. An important action in this field recently was the decontrol of gypsum board and lath, the interior wall materials most widely used in residential construction.

At the present time only a few building materials items remain under export control. These are the items presently in shortest supply, such as water-closet sets, metal window and door frames, cast-iron soil pipe, iron and steel conduit, and woven-wire screen cloth. Exports of prefabricated houses also are subject to individual licensing. Continued selective control is essential in this field in order to prevent excessive drains on the domestic supply which might impede needed construction.

Coal

The coal situation improved materially in 1948, both in the United States and abroad. Increased production in western Europe, as well as the scarcity of dollars, has eased the pressure of demand upon the United States, and domestic production has been adequate to supply both domestic needs and reduced foreign requirements.

The decline in foreign requirements, coupled with continued high levels of production and rising stocks, have permitted a relaxation of export restrictions. Since September 1948, coal has been under open-end quota, and applications have been licensed freely. Controls have been maintained chiefly because of continued shortages of high grades of low-volatile coal. If production continues to increase in Europe and is maintained near current levels in this country, it may be possible to delete coal from the positive list in 1949.

Petroleum

The petroleum-supply position this year has proved adequate not only to meet the seasonally high summertime demands for gasoline, but also to permit the build-up of substantial inventories of heating oils to meet the needs of winter consumption. A careful check has had to be maintained on the volume of exports, however, because petroleum continues to be in seriously tight world supply.

The balance in supply and demand was achieved in this country in 1948 by importing more petroleum than was exported. This is a basic change from prewar when, in 1939 for example, exports were five times as much as was imported. In recognition of the increased dependence of the United States and western Europe upon petroleum supplies from the Middle East and Latin America, the Government has followed a policy of supporting petroleum projects in those areas with such materials as could be made available. About 80 percent of the steel allocated for export for all project purposes—petroleum, mining, transportation, food, and so forth—is being used for petroleum operations.

Chemicals and drugs

The year 1948 was, in general, a peak-production year for chemicals and drugs, by the end of which many of the more acute supply shortages had been overcome. A major factor in the postwar world shortage in this field has been the disruption of the European industry. The increased production in the United Kingdom and Germany during the past year and the expansion of output in Italy, Switzerland, South Africa, Canada, and Australia have lessened the pressure on United States supplies.

The pattern of United States export controls has followed closely the changes in the supply situation and outlook. During the year such important products as soda ash, caustic soda, lauryl alcohol, phenol formaldehyde resins, creosote, insulin, and streptomycin were removed from the positive list. On the other hand, for a few other products it was necessary to tighten controls because of growing shortages of the basic nonferrous metals from which they are derived. These include antimony oxide, the lead chemicals, and the chromates.

Coal chemicals

One of the immediate byproducts of the coking of coal is crude coal tar which, when further distilled, is a source of a large number of chemical products, including benzene, toluene, cresols, creosote oil, and naphthalene. From these in turn are derived such finished products as plastics, dyes, synthetic fibers, pharmaceuticals, insecticides, and explosives. Of the coal chemicals, those still in short supply in the United States—cresols, cresylic acid, benzol, and phenol—are subject to export controls.

Chromium chemicals

Most important of the chromium chemicals is sodium bichromate, which is used directly in the textile and tanning industries, and is also the base from which chromic acid, potassium bichromate, and chromium tanning mixtures are produced. United States supplies are inadequate to meet both the present high level of domestic consumption and unrestricted foreign requirements, and accordingly, reduced export quotas have been imposed.

Caustic soda and soda ash

The alkalies afford excellent examples of the need to keep export control authority flexible to meet changing supply conditions. At the beginning of 1948, the world shortage of these materials was acute and foreign requirements far exceeded established export quotas. During the year, however, increased domestic production and a sharp decline in foreign demands made possible, first, an easing of quota restrictions, and finally, the removal of soda ash and caustic soda from the positive list.

Drugs

The most important recent export control development in this field has been the decontrol of streptomycin. As United States supplies increased it was possible to liberalize the amounts authorized for export. In the third quarter of 1947, the export quota was 825,000 grams; by the second quarter 1948 the quota had been raised to 6,000,000 grams, and for the remainder of the year, streptomycin was licensed under an open-end quota. A review of the situation at the close of the year indicated domestic requirements of less than half of expected supply so that export controls were no longer necessary on that account.

Fertilizers

Fertilizers are composed of three types of primary materials, nitrogenous, phosphatic, and potassic. There is a world shortage of fertilizer material which is particularly serious in the case of the nitrogenous.

Current United States supplies of phosphatic fertilizers are adequate to permit free exports without adverse effect, so they are no longer on the positive list.

Prewar, Germany was the world's major supplier of potash. Approximately 60 percent of Germany's resources are located in the Soviet zones. Potash supplies for western Europe now come mainly from France, Spain, and Palestine, and some from Russia. Shipments of potash from the United States to Western Hemisphere destinations and the Philippines are not subject to export licensing, but exports to all other areas are tightly controlled.

Nitrogenous fertilizers are subject to strict export controls to all destinations. Most of the western European countries produce these fertilizers, but, except for Belgium, Italy, Norway, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom, imports are required to supplement indigenous production. The only other exporting countries, in addition to the United States, are Canada and Chile.

Machinery and equipment

The major machinery items whose exports are controlled in order to protect the domestic supply are railway freight cars and parts. To conserve steel and insure increased domestic freight-car parts, freight cars were placed on the positive list on July 1, 1947. Production has been steadily increasing since the beginning of 1947; but the total of cars in operation has not increased appreciably because of the large number of retirements. To prevent the assembly abroad of complete cars from United States parts, freight-car parts, and air-brake equipment were added to the positive list in February 1948.

While some commodities in the machinery category are still in tight supply, the producers themselves have limited exports, thus obviating the necessity for Government controls. Production of motor vehicles, for example, is still short of demand, but exports in 1948, in the absence of controls, represented a little over 6 percent of production, compared with 7 percent in 1947 and 8 percent prewar. The situation with respect to farm machinery and tractors is essentially the same.

Lumber

The high level of lumber production reached in 1947 has been maintained throughout 1948. While domestic demand for lumber has been large, all requirements including a high volume for housing construction have been met. Imports of lumber, which come chiefly from Canada, have increased even more sharply than domestic production. With these increases in supply, shortages in the common grades of lumber have eased considerably during the past year.

Exports in 1948 represented 1.4 percent of the total new supply as against 3 percent in 1947, and 5 percent before the war. The sharp drop in lumber exports stems chiefly from the contraction of foreign demand. Supplies were ample, but foreign orders were not forthcoming in sufficient quantity to absorb even the limited export quotas established by the Department of Commerce. In line with the policy to retain export controls only so long as there is a clear need for their continuation, virtually all lumber was removed from the positive list as of January 1, 1949. The only lumber items remaining under control are Port Orford cedar (a speciality product used to make separators for storage batteries), railroad ties, and millwork.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE BILL

In general the bill would provide for the continuation of the existing export control authority. The scope of the export control program proposed by this bill is for most purposes identical with the scope of the program under existing law. The principal differences proposed by the new bill are concerned with provision for a more effective enforcement program, and making mandatory the requirement (1) for interdepartmental consultation as to specific items to be controlled and the extent of the control, and (2) for consultation with representatives of the export trade concerning licensing criteria and related matters.

Section 1

Section 1 would provide that this act may be cited as the "Export Control Act of 1949."

This section also sets forth findings which justify the necessity for the continuation of export controls.

Section 2

This section would provide that the control of exports shall be used to the extent necessary to effect certain policies of the United States, namely: (1) To protect the domestic economy from the excessive drain of scarce materials and to reduce the inflationary impact of abnormal foreign demand; (2) to further the foreign policy of the United States and to aid in fulfilling its international responsibilities; and (3) to exercise the necessary vigilance over exports from the standpoint of their significance to the national security.

Section 3

This section would authorize the President to prohibit or curtail the exportation from the United States, its Territories, and possessions, any articles, materials, or supplies, including technical data, except under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe in order to effectuate the policy set forth in section 2. To the extent necessary to achieve effective enforcement of this act such rules and regulations may apply to the financing, exporting, and other servicing of exports and the participation therein by any person.

Subsection (b) would provide that the President may delegate the power, authority, and discretion conferred upon him by this act to such departments, agencies, or officials of the Government as he may deem appropriate.

Section 4

Subsection (a) of this section would provide for consultation by the department, agency, or official determining which articles, materials, or supplies shall be controlled and the extent to which exports thereof shall be limited, and the several executive departments and individual agencies concerned with aspects of our domestic and foreign policies and operations having important bearing upon exports. These provisions requiring such consultation, while not contained in existing law, are presently being used to correlate to the fullest extent possible the activities of the departments and agencies responsible for determining export quotas with those departments and agencies concerned with other aspects of our domestic and foreign policies and operations having an important bearing on exports. The provisions of this subsection would make such consultation mandatory.

Subsection (b) would provide that in authorizing exports full utilization of private competitive trade channels shall be encouraged insofar as practicable, giving consideration to the interests of small business, merchant exporters as well as producers, and established and new exporters. To effect this purpose this subsection would require that provision shall be made for representative trade consultation.

This subsection would also provide that in addition to utilizing competitive trade channels insofar as practicable in the authorization of exports there may be applied such other standards or criteria, such as destination, end-use, or price criteria, as may be deemed necessary by the head of such department or agency, or official to carry out the policies of this act. Destination, end-use, and price criteria are presently applied with respect to the control of exports under provisions of existing law.

Section 5

This section would provide for the civil and criminal penalties, which, upon conviction may be imposed for violation of any provision of the act or any regulation, order, or license issued thereunder.

Section 6

Subsection (a) of this section would provide for certain authority which may be exercised by the head of any department, agency, or official exercising any functions under the act with respect to the making of investigations of, the keeping of records by, and the inspection of books, records, and other writings of, any person affected by the provisions of the act to the extent necessary or appropriate to the enforcement of the act. Subpena powers would be authorized to require the appearance of persons or the production of books, records, and other writings, or both, to the extent necessary or appropriate to the enforcement of the act.

Subsection (b) of this section would provide for the application of the immunity provisions of the Compulsory Testimony Act of February 11, 1893, with respect to individuals who specifically claim such privilege.

Subsection (c) of this section would provide that no department, agency, or official exercising any functions under this act shall publish or disclose information obtained thereunder which is deemed confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information unless the head of such department, agency, or official determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the public interest.

Section 7

This section would provide for the exemption of functions exercised under this act from the Administrative Procedure Act, except as to the public information requirements of section 3 of such act.

Section 8

This section would provide for the making of a quarterly report to the President and the Congress by the head of any department or agency or official exercising any functions under the act.

Section 9

This section would define the term "person."

Section 10

This section would provide that the act of February 15, 1936, relating to the licensing of exports in tin-plate scrap is superseded by the provisions of this act. This section further provides that nothing contained in this act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or otherwise affect the provisions of any other laws authorizing control over exports of any commodity. Some of the commodities presently under export control pursuant to the provisions of other laws and not affected by the provisions of this act are narcotics and gold, ammunition, arms and implements of war, tobacco seed, and atomic energy materials.

Section 11

This section would provide that the act will take effect on February 28, 1949, upon the expiration of the existing export-control law and also would provide that all outstanding delegations, regulations, orders, licenses, or other forms of administrative action under the existing export-control authority shall remain in full force and effect, until amended or revoked, the same as promulgated under this act.

Section 12

This section would provide that the authority granted under this act will terminate on June 30, 1951, or upon any prior date upon which the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 17 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE].

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Chairman, it is my judgment that world economic and political conditions make it imperative that our export-control program be extended for two basic reasons:

First, to protect our domestic economy against the inflationary effects of unrestricted foreign purchases of commodities which are still in short supply; and

Second, to channel exports to countries where the need is greatest and where our foreign policy and national security interests will be served best.

I have supported this program since it was introduced in 1940. But I have done so with the understanding that controls would be lifted and normal exporting practices resumed as soon as the supply situation and the national security position permitted.

Consequently, it has been a matter of increasingly grave concern to me that controls have not been removed more promptly when circumstances have warranted such action. Consider for instance, agricultural commodities, and particularly fats and oils. Despite enormous surpluses, controls were not relaxed at all until mounting pressure forced belated action by the Department of Commerce several days ago.

The fats and oils situation, Mr. Chairman, is nothing short of tragic. In the face of tremendous shortages throughout the world, huge surpluses have been permitted to accumulate here in the United States. These huge surpluses have demoralized our domestic markets. I shall discuss briefly a few of the more serious aspects of this unfortunate situation:

First. Lard is selling below cost of production. The present price is from 12 to 15 cents per pound, while the price of the live hog is about 20 cents. The surplus of lard is constantly increasing, and last year's enormous corn crop assures continued high production of hogs this year. Furthermore, the thousands of animals killed in the recent western blizzards will be fit only for rendering. This will add large quantities of fats to the surpluses already on hand.

Second. During the past decade the production of soybeans in the United States increased from approximately 60,000,000 bushels in 1938 to 220,000,000 bushels in 1948. Perhaps no other factor is more responsible for our present self-sufficient position in edible fats and oils. This is in direct contrast to our position 10 years ago, when we were importers of fats and oils and relied on other parts of the world for our supplies. Unfortunately, however, this tremendous increase in soybean production has had a most depressing effect upon the prices of fats and oils. Not only are we now self-sufficient but our surplus is immense. During the past year soybean prices dropped from about $4 per bushel to less than $2.30 per bushel, and soybean oil declined from well above 30 cents per pound to 13 cents per pound.

Third. In May of last year cottonseed oil sold for more than 40 cents a pound at the mills. Less than 6 months later—last November—at the peak of cottonseed marketing, cottonseed oil sold at 20 cents per pound. Currently the price is, I believe, under 14 cents per pound. On January 1 of this year the Bureau of the Census reported 500,000 tons of cottonseed had not yet been marketed. Both the processors, who have bought the bulk of the crop on the basis of 19-cent—not 14-cent—oil, and the cotton farmers, who have not yet marketed their cottonseed, are now faced with ruinous losses. In this connection I may say that my good friend and colleague the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], during the course of the hearings on this legislation, brought out the point that Brazil is presently selling cottonseed oil and other oils to Canada and to Italy at 20 cents per pound, and more, whereas the price paid to farmers in the United States for the same oil is 14 cents per pound, or less. And please bear in mind that the American taxpayer is paying for the oil which Canada and Italy are buying from Brazil at the higher price.

Mr. Chairman, top officials from the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce testified that fats and oils are in short world supply. And yet huge surpluses have been permitted to pile up in our country, resulting in complete demoralization of our fats and oils markets. The surpluses are so great that we do not even have sufficient tank facilities for storing the oils. During the next 6 months alone, the best available estimates indicate we will have a surplus of edible fats and oils for export in excess of 500,000,000 pounds.

The testimony given in committee throws considerable light on the reasons for this confusion. The export quotas for the various commodities are determined by what is called the interagency committee. This, it seems, consists of so-called "experts" from the Department of Commerce, the Department of State, the Department of Agriculture, the Economic Cooperation Administration, and numerous other agencies. I refer you to pages 16–19 and 121–123 of the committee hearings where you will find pertinent information brought out in replies to my questioning of several witnesses. In other words, even though the Secretary of Agriculture may recommend increased exports of a commodity in surplus, many months may elapse while the various agencies consider what to do, first individually, then collectively. Meanwhile, surpluses pile up and prices collapse. For example, as far back as last November the Department of Agriculture recommended increased exports of edible fats and oils. The harvests were completed; the existence of huge surpluses was evident; world supply statistics were available—and yet actual lifting of controls which prevented the export of these domestic surpluses was withheld by the Department of Commerce until a few days ago, and even then the relaxation was piecemeal.

Then, too, it appears that the production estimates of the Department of Agriculture have been inaccurate. Predicting harvests, supplies, and surpluses is of course a risky and difficult business at best, but it does seem the experts, despite our marvelous past performances in food production, are always inclined to take an overly pessimistic outlook. Be that as it may, officials of the Department of Agriculture have demonstrated a timidity or hesitancy—even when crops have been harvested and surpluses piled up—in acting promptly and forcefully to keep the domestic supply-demand situation in normal balance. This particular problem is, of course, administrative rather than legislative, and I am hopeful that the Department will profit from the current disastrous experience in fats and oils. In all fairness, it must be admitted that the unreasonably long delays which brought on the present crisis in fats and oils is attributable primarily to the slow motion of the so-called interagency setup rather than to inaction by the Department of Agriculture.

All of these facts were brought out in detail in the committee hearings on this bill. Consequently, I offered two amendments in committee: One, proposing that the Secretary of Agriculture should have full jurisdiction over agricultural exports, without review authority by the Secretary of Commerce; the other, proposing to remove fats and oils from export control. Although no one challenged the facts on which my amendments were based, they failed to get majority approval.

I, therefore, decided to offer these amendments on the floor of the House. However, two recent developments have caused me to change my plan somewhat; in the first place, the Department of Commerce has, because of mounting criticism and pressure, at long last placed fats and oils under general license. This action, belated though it be, has the effect of removing them from export control except as to destination; secondly, the Senate has now approved a bill which contains an amendment purporting to provide decontrol of agricultural commodities when in surplus.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Senate amendment could be improved materially by rephrasing. Roughly, it provides for decontrol when the Secretary of Agriculture makes an affirmative finding that there exists a surplus of an agricultural commodity. In my opinion it would be more satisfactory if the amendment provided that the controls would be imposed only when the Secretary of Agriculture made a finding that there was a shortage of a given commodity.

Nevertheless, because I have come to the reluctant conclusion that it may be the best amendment which it is possible to enact at this time in this Chamber and in order to expedite action on this urgently needed legislation, I propose to offer, at the appropriate time, the Senate amendment, which reads as follows:

The authority conferred by this section shall not be exercised with respect to any agricultural commodity, including fats and oils, during any period for which the supply of such commodity is determined by the Secretary of Agriculture to be in excess of the requirements of the domestic economy except to the extent required to effectuate the policies set forth in clause (b) or clause (c) of section 2 hereof.

If this amendment is not enacted, there is nothing to prevent the reimposition of controls at the whim of the Department of Commerce. Legislative action is necessary to assure our producers that abnormal surpluses shall not be permitted to demoralize domestic food markets while world food supplies are pitifully inadequate.

Mr. Chairman, it is my conviction that the Secretary of Agriculture should be given final responsibility and full authority for determining the quantities of agricultural commodities, including fats and oils, which are in excess of our own needs and thus available for export. The Congress cannot, of course, insure that the Secretary will exercise this power well. But, by centering the authority and the responsibility in the Secretary of Agriculture, the Congress will remove some of the cooks who may have spoiled the broth up to now. The enactment of this amendment should serve notice that the Congress will no longer tolerate indecision, inaction, and long delays which impair our national economy. The costly fats and oils tragedy must not be repeated.

Accordingly, I urge Members on both sides of the aisle to support the amendment which I will offer at the proper time.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TALLE. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am sorry I was not present when the gentleman started, but is it a fact that the Department of Commerce has removed the restrictions on the exports of fats and oils?

Mr. TALLE. The Department took such action first on inedible fats after hearings on the pending bill were under way. A few days ago controls were relaxed on edible fats. The Department was under great pressure to do so—but of course under present law the controls can be reimposed.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just for a moment?

Mr. TALLE. I cannot resist yielding to my distinguished friend from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The gentleman from Iowa is a splendid member of our committee. He understands the subject which he is now discussing. He has been in attendance every minute at the committee meetings.

Mr. TALLE. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Georgia very much.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I expect to offer this amendment on page 3 after line 2:

"(c) The authority conferred by this section shall not be exercised with respect to any agricultural commodity, including fats and oils, during any period for which the supply of such commodity is determined by the Secretary of Agriculture to be in excess of the requirements of the domestic economy, except to the extent required to effectuate the policies set forth in clause (b) or clause (c) of section 2 hereof."

That is practically the same amendment, I think, that was adopted by the Senate.

Mr. TALLE. I propose to offer the Senate amendment, so we are in agreement on that.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TALLE. I yield to my colleague from Iowa.

Mr. HOEVEN. First of all, let me congratulate my colleague on his splendid presentation. I understood my colleague to say that unless this amendment was adopted, the authority would still rest in the Secretary of Commerce to determine whether or not these controls should be imposed or removed.

Mr. TALLE. The gentleman is right.

Mr. HOEVEN. It is further my understanding, gathered from reading news reports some days ago, that the White House had assured the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that hereafter jurisdiction would be lodged in the Secretary of Agriculture and not in the Secretary of Commerce. Would the gentleman care to comment on that? It is my understanding this is one of the reasons why an amendment such as now proposed, was not adopted in the committee.

Mr. TALLE. I may say to my colleague that that was stated at the time I introduced my amendments in the committee for the purpose of doing what I am trying to do now in one amendment.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TALLE. I yield to my colleague from Iowa.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I want to compliment the gentleman on the very fine exposition he has made of this matter, and would like to ask this question: In your opinion, was the break in the price of livestock in the markets, beginning along last fall some time, brought about by the surplus of animal fats and other kinds of fats in this country?

Mr. TALLE. Oh, there is no doubt but that there was a very direct connection.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Would the gentleman explain the connection, please?

Mr. TALLE. Well, I will merely repeat what I said earlier, that the price of lard really determines the price of hogs. Obviously, if you have a stopper to the normal outlet for lard supply that is bound to back up and influence the price of the hogs. The result is the farmer gets a lower price for his hogs. But the packer must get a higher price for the meat on the hog when he fails to get the normal price for lard.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TALLE. I yield to my colleague from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. I want to compliment the gentleman on his able presentation, and ask this question: Has anyone in America or in the whole wide world benefited by the piling up of fats and oils in America except the soap manufacturer? Can the gentleman think of anyone, except the soap manufacturers, who has profited?

Mr. TALLE. I will answer that by saying that it certainly has been very harmful to the people who should get the money; that is, the cotton farmers who bring their seed to the crushers, the hog farmers who bring their hogs to market, the soybean people who bring their soybeans to the crushing mills. They are the people who do the hard work. Certainly they should have a just reward for their arduous toil.

Mr. JENSEN. The low price of lard and fats and oils raised the price of meat, did it not, naturally, in order for the packer to make a profit?

Mr. TALLE. He had to, otherwise he could not come out even on his operations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to hear the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE] is in favor of the amendment which I shall offer at the appropriate time. I am glad our minds are together on this amendment. It makes me more sure that I am correct in offering it.

Some time ago the people representing the growers of agricultural commodities and the processors came to my office and told me what they wanted. They wanted the authority in the Department of Agriculture instead of the Department of Commerce to say how much surplus we had, and then to say how much of the surplus we could afford to export to other countries. This is the principal thing they complained about. In the committee it appeared as if most of the members of the committee were in sympathy with the proposal that the Department of Agriculture should have this authority. The President called up our chairman and then called me and said that he hoped I would not offer the amendment. I read him the amendment and he had no objection to it and said I could assure the committee that he would delegate this authority to the Department of Agriculture. Therefore, I did not offer the amendment in the committee.

Since that time the growers and processors have decided that agricultural commodities should be decontrolled when in excess of the requirements of the domestic economy except to the extent required to effectuate the policies set forth in clause (b) or clause (c) of section 2. That is the amendment I shall offer later and is the amendment referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE].

Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of Commerce or his assistant appearing for him at the hearing in behalf of H. R. 1661, said that—

> Generally speaking, the purposes to be accomplished by this bill are to protect the domestic economy by limiting exports of scarce materials, and to channel exports to countries where need is greatest and where our foreign policy and national security interests would be best served.

If this policy is adhered to, there would be little or no objection to it. Generally speaking, export controls do not promote trade and commerce for our products here, and we should have controls only under certain emergency situations. I do not believe that it was ever the intention of Congress to have surplus commodities under controls.

Our policy for years has been to do away with all restrictions which impede commerce, especially with reference to surplus commodities we have to sell.

No one should oppose the export control of critical and strategic metals and minerals.

The testimony at the hearing made it clear there are a number of commodities still in short supply in this country and in the world, such as steel, petroleum, and electrical goods. There are also a number of commodities of high strategic value, particularly special metals, which are in limited supply here and abroad.

I agree that this Government should have the power to control the exports of these items in short supply in order to control inflation at home. For our national security I also believe we should not permit unlimited export of our limited supply of strategic commodities.

Furthermore, it appears prudent from the standpoint of our national security to vest in the administration the power to control the destination of certain strategic and critical items. Also, we are committed to a policy of rehabilitating and assisting the countries participating in the European recovery program. I think the people of this country are in accord with these broad objectives. At least we in the committee have heard no objections to this policy.

In granting such powers, the authority must obviously be rather broad and must contain considerable discretion. The Congress clearly is not in a position to determine which individual commodities should be controlled, to what destination, when, and for how long. For this reason the over-all power is given to the President and he, in turn, is given the right to delegate this authority.

It is the administration of the export-control program that has concerned me. I have not been satisfied with the way the program has been administered in the past. We have endeavored to see to it that the administration will be improved in the future.

The particular complaint in the past has been that controls have been retained longer than necessary. In the case of fats and oils, for instance, strict allocations and individual licenses were still required long after the supply situation had completely changed from one of shortage to one of surplus. This year, for instance, the production of edible fats and oils was about 550,000,000 pounds larger than last. Crop reports indicated this surplus months ago. The market reflected the surplus months ago. Crude cottonseed oil, for instance, dropped from about 40 cents per pound in May of 1948 to 20 cents in November, to 14 cents in January of 1949 and to about 11¼ cents last week, several cents under OPA prices. The storage tanks were overflowing with oil, crushers were refusing to buy the farmers' seed. Cottonseed prices were halved in a period of weeks from $80 per ton to $40 last week. At the same time, foreign countries still very short of edible fats and oils were clamoring to buy our oils. Our competitors were selling edible fats and oils in world markets for dollars at 30 to 50 percent above our domestic prices. In face of the of the obvious the administration did too little too late.

Upon investigation we found the procedure for making allocations and administering controls cumbersome. Export policies on agricultural commodities were being considered by large, unwieldly interagency committees of such uninterested parties as the Atomic Energy Commission. The bottleneck we found was the Department of Commerce, which had the final authority over all commodities, even agricultural commodities. Many of us felt the Secretary of Agriculture was the only person qualified to determine the exportable surplus of agricultural commodities, and that he, not the Secretary of Commerce, should have the final authority in controlling exports of any agricultural commodities.

To implement the program and improve the administration, I prepared an amendment to the bill to transfer the authority over agricultural commodities from the Secretary of Commerce to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The President called and talked to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] and to me about the amendment, and assured us that he would make such a delegation of authority to the Secretary of Agriculture under the general power conferred upon him by this proposed legislation. I therefore did not offer my amendment.

There was another development that had important influence on the action of the administration on export control of fats and oils. The Senate passed a companion bill on export control, S. 548, with an amendment requiring decontrol of agricultural commodities during any period in which they are determined by the Secretary of Agriculture to be in surplus, provided such action does not interfere with our international obligations and our national security. This amendment was intended as a guide for the Secretary of Agriculture in controlling exports of agricultural commodities.

Following Senate action and further prodding by Congressmen, the Secretary of Agriculture agreed to the decontrol of edible fats and oils. Commerce supported the position and announced the decontrol under the terms of which allocations are discontinued and individual licenses are discontinued to all countries outside Europe and the U. S. S. R. There individual licenses are still required on fats and oils as they are on all commodities.

I am convinced the transfer of authority over agricultural commodities from Commerce to Agriculture, as the President has assured us he will do, will improve the administration of the program. At the same time, it may also be well to write into the bill a guide for the Secretary of Agriculture to follow, namely, that he will decontrol agricultural commodities when they are in surplus. Writing such a standard into the legislation should prevent the delay in decontrolling other agricultural commodities as was experienced in inedible and edible fats and oils by making decontrol automatic while the surplus exists. This would not interfere with the authority to control shipments to Europe under license.

In this manner the objectives of the bill—controlling exports of scarce and strategic commodities—can be assured and the danger of controls thwarting trade in general commodities can be minimized.

Some people believe that the reason edible fats and oils are selling for much higher prices in Europe than here is because our surplus of oils and fats is being held back.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. ALBERT. Did your committee find out why the Department of Commerce would not issue export licenses, in view of the domestic and world situation with reference to fats and oils?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I did my best to find out. I took up about two-thirds of the time of the committee. I practiced law a great many years before I came to Congress. Sometimes a lawyer has to do a little testifying with an unwilling witness. I had to do it in this instance. I think if the gentleman will read the hearings he will find what he wants.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in 1940 the Congress enacted legislation which gave the President authority to control exports. That power has been continued periodically. Last year the power was continued until February 28, 1949. The powers which the President has had have not been materially changed since their inception in 1940. The only change that I recall that has been made was when the extension was enacted last year, the Congress provided that the President might take into consideration price criteria in determining to whom these licenses should be granted. I never quite knew why we gave him that authority. I argued that to give him the authority would perhaps result in certain discriminatory practices which would not be conducive to stability either in the foreign market or the domestic market. Some were unkind enough to charge that under the price criteria provisions the President could invoke control of the prices of commodities of domestic production. I bring that out only to show that during the time that this export control authority has been in existence, from 1940 down to date, covering the period of preparedness, covering the period of the war, covering the 3 years of postwar economic adjustment throughout the world, the President has not asked for any additional authority than that granted him in the original 1940 act, until this relatively inconsequential change was made last year.

We reenacted this legislation last year as an aid to inflation control. There were two basic reasons why we had inflation: One was the loose money policies of the Government; the other was the unusually heavy demand by foreign countries for American goods in short supply. In order that he might balance foreign demand against domestic stability we gave the President almost carte blanche authority to control exports; we gave him the authority to prevent all exports from the United States if he saw fit to do so and if it were necessary to protect the domestic economy. We gave him authority to do anything short of this total embargo against any exports, and for 7 years there has been adequate, there has been sufficient, power to enforce export controls.

This bill is probably the first of a very important series of bills which might be presented to this Congress. This bill and the action which you take on this bill sets the pattern. Here is the importance of it: You build the framework of government for years to come; this is the pattern that you cut out for the future of America. I say that because it is now indicative of a change in policy, indicative of the fact that there are still two forces at work in America; one which prides itself on its zeal, desire, and almost insane ambition to perpetuate all of those things which have made America great and strong and potent in world affairs—we call it the American way of life. As opposed to the American way of life there is a large and ever-growing group in America which teaches that we should abandon the American way of life, which teaches that we should adopt totalitarianism and the socialistic state if America is going to expand economically, socially, and politically in its influences. They teach that we must borrow from the works of Marx in order to perpetuate the prosperity which we have enjoyed throughout the last one-hundred-and-fifty-odd years. The issues are clearly drawn between those who would perpetuate the American system and maintain America as a strong economic, social, and political influence and those who would appeal to radicalism, totalitarianism, collectivism, socialism, communism—whatever you may call it—in any form. That is the basic problem before the American people, and let me repeat, this bill determines what the superstructure of government will be, whether the American system of government is going to be changed from one of free enterprise to one of a managed economy.

It has been asked, Why are these new powers—when production is increasing in western Europe, in the face of the fact that in western Germany production has increased over 100 percent during the last year and when production in the other western democracies has increased anywhere from 25 to 80 percent—necessary to expand the power which the Executive has in respect to export controls if it is not a desire to effectuate the purposes of those who would destroy the fundamentals of American democracy and substitute therefor totalitarianism or socialism?

It is a serious question and one in which you will have to explore the depths of your own conscience to find the answer.

I do not think anyone will contend that the world economic situation is as bad today as it was 6 months or a year ago. We all like to feel that the help which we have given to foreign countries has resulted in increasing production and a very, very long step toward economic stability in many of the foreign countries. So attention should be given to our own economy and the stabilization of our own economy.

My very honored and dear friend, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, for whom all of us have great respect, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE], asks, "Why be so captious about a few words?" Well, a few words have changed the destiny of the world and the few words he refers to in this bill can cause a change in the very form of government here in America.

He says we should not have any apprehension about the administration or operation of the plan. Well, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE] and the gentleman from Georgia have pointed out that because of the failure of the administration to balance foreign demand against domestic stability, the bottom has dropped out from under the domestic market for fats and oils. So, we must take legislative action to correct the deficiencies in administration in the law already.

The same man who is to administer this law is the man whom this Congress once voted out of office, and is now the subject of a controversy as to whether he leans more favorably toward the American system, or the totalitarian system. He is the man in the Department of Commerce who administers this law. We should have some apprehension about the administration of this law, especially when it presumes to give such broad and unusual powers which are not needed any more than they ever have been needed since 1940 to do an effective job in respect to export controls.

Let us point to one or two of them by way of example.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. I would like to know who the gentleman is speaking about. Is the gentleman speaking about the Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, no.

Mr. SPENCE. Or the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No. William W. Remington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if you will refer to the bill on page 2, line 19, you will find this language:

To the extent necessary to achieve effective enforcement of this act, such rules and regulations may apply to financing, transporting, and other servicing of exports and the participation therein by any person.

Now, they are to be given under this bill, if this language remains in here, the authority to regulate the financing and transporting of goods for export; and the purpose of the controls of exports found in the declaration of policy is so broad that when you tie that language in with the declaration of policy, you give the administration the power to manage the domestic economy of the United States. Do we now, 3½ years after the cessation of hostilities, in peacetime, even though it is a de facto peace, desire to enlarge the powers, expand the powers, the war powers, which the Government had? Those are the important questions and those are the problems which this Congress, in this bill, have got to solve because, as I said, this is the pattern you are making today. This is the pattern: Do you want to give authority that the Administrator will be able to control over which railroads commodities being sent from the Midwest and the far West to the Atlantic seaboard shall be shipped?

The broad interpretations by the courts on what constitutes interstate commerce are to the effect that anything which affects interstate commerce is subject to the commerce clause of the Constitution. Applying that same logic to export controls, this administration under this act can go into any banking house, any financial institution, and explore into the actions of individuals in respect to financing, the manner in which exports shall be financed. We do not set up any standards limiting the control of the financing, and when we do not set up any standards with respect to control of financing or transporting, of course we give them carte blanche authority—it is very doubtful whether it is constitutional or not—to do what they please in respect to financing and transporting and other servicing. What do they mean by that? Do you know? I do not. What do they mean by "other servicing" of exports? I do not know.

That language, Mr. Chairman, coupled with the declaration of policy, gives the administration the power to control the domestic economy of the United States. Can you now think of giving them the authority to control the economy of the United States or manage the economy of the United States, when you have on such frequent occasions during the cessation of hostilities denied them these powers?

Any official may be designated to administer this act, not any official named by the President and confirmed by the Senate, as we have always written into these laws wherein we transfer and delegate broad executive powers to an official. We have always compelled them to be officials that at least Congress has something to say about appointing. But an official in this instance might be a section head, because they are left to interpret the act as they see fit. It may be a clerk or a stenographer, who becomes an official upon being designated.

In addition to all the other powers they are given under this act, regulations and orders and licenses may be granted under such standards, such criteria, as may be deemed necessary to carry out the policies of the act. Standards or criteria deemed necessary by whom, and within what limitations? No limitations whatsoever, but standards and criteria established by some department, some agency, or some official, without restraint so long as that official holds that a standard is necessary and a criterion is necessary to effect the purposes of this act, which might include the management of the domestic economy. He can make such standards and criteria effective, and effective how? By providing in the act that if any of your constituents being subject to the provisions of any of these regulations set up to control exports or the domestic economy violate any of these standards or criteria promulgated under regulations issued by any official of the Government, they can be sent to prison for 1 year and fined $10,000.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. LYLE. Will the gentleman take a moment to clear up a couple of points? In the hearings and investigation before the committee on this bill did they go into the past history of the administration of this act?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes, there was a good deal of testimony with respect to that.

Mr. LYLE. Did you find any reason then to anticipate that it might be poorly administered and that they might take liberties, as you suggest they can under this act?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, because the act was so limited that they could not take these liberties. They could not establish standards. The only criteria that they could establish was the one having to do with prices which we provided for last year. Therefore, unless we give them this authority that they are asking for, they have no authority to set up these standards and criteria other than on prices.

I am sorry I cannot yield to the gentleman further.

If you turn to page 4, line 13, you will note that these departments and officials may make investigations and obtain information and require reports for the keeping of records and they may make such inspections of books and records and of other writings or of the property or premises of "any person," and they can take the sworn testimony of "any person." Surely I think that that should be confined to any person who makes an application for an export license because if this provision is enacted into law, then it would apply to any business which is doing a purely domestic business, which might be in competition with another concern doing an export business or another concern doing both export and domestic business because it affects exports. The administration would have the authority under such a law to go into any industry or any business establishment or farm and inspect the property and premises and take the sworn testimony of those persons. This is a new and unusual power which has never been given to the Government even in time of war.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. VORYS. Before the gentleman leaves that point with respect to "any person," would that include, let us say, the books and papers of the gentleman from Michigan who is now in the well of the House, whose records might be necessary or appropriate in connection with the administration of this act? I see no exception so far as Members of Congress are concerned.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I assume that under the Constitution we might have certain immunities which our constituents who are fortunate enough to be in the business, the professions, or agriculture, might not have.

You will recall that throughout the years we have discussed what has been called the snooping clause in bills before us. We have always protected our farmers, wage earners, businessmen, and industrialists from abuses with respect to the power to gather information which has been vested in various departments of the Government. But there is no such protection in subsection (c) on page 5. That section reads:

No department, agency, or official exercising any functions under this act shall publish or disclose information obtained hereunder—

That is fine up to that point. Now, reading that hurriedly, one might say, "Well, they are given protection because the departments cannot publish any of this information." But it goes on to say, "which is deemed confidential." Deemed confidential by whom? The person seeking the information? The agency or official seeking the information? Whether one of those deems it confidential?

Now, it goes on with what looks like further protection:

with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information—

If you stop there, they are given protection. If the person from whom the information is sought wants the matter to be treated as confidential, up to that point the matter is treated as confidential. But the following qualifies this language:

unless the head of such department or agency determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the national interest.

There are no standards with respect to what constitutes the national interest, in this act. It is left wholly to the discretion of the official or department or agency as to whether information, trade information, information in respect to competitors, information in respect to patents, trade practices, farm practices, industrial practices, which may be of great value to a competitor—that information is not protected.

Now, the sensible thing to do, in the light of the changes which are now taking place in our economic conditions—and regardless of the details, we all do know that something is happening to our domestic economy now—the sensible thing to do is to continue these controls for a year as is; and then in another year or later in the term, if we have to, we will determine what controls are further necessary to fit them into the new pattern which will be cut after we know what is happening to the American economy.

I am going to offer as a substitute for this bill, at the proper time, a bill to continue these controls as they exist in the present law, for 1 year. I hope that the committee will consider it as a very sensible request and will support it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has again expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I heard the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is a very valuable member of our committee, and who was chairman of the committee during the Eightieth Congress, state that this bill sets a pattern; that the American way of life is involved; that we are determining by our votes now whether we will have a socialistic state or that our vote on this bill will determine whether or not we are changing from a free enterprise system to a managed economy or to a totalitarian government. I do not share his views.

After saying all those things about this bill, the distinguished gentleman finished his speech by saying that he was for it for 1 more year.

CRITERIA USED IN EXPORT LICENSING

There is no single criterion which can be used to divide export quotas among all exporters with perfect equity. To carry out the purposes of export controls as authorized by Congress, a number of criteria or standards have had to be established for the approval or disapproval of export applications. The problem varies almost with each important commodity. Experience has also shown that there must be permitted administrative flexibility in determining proper criteria to meet changing supply and market conditions as well as current foreign policy and national security objectives.

The following are the criteria most regularly applied, and the reasons therefor:

ELIGIBILITY OF APPLICATIONS

Except for the requirement that a license applicant must be subject to the jurisdiction of the United States—a requirement of obvious enforcement significance—everyone is eligible to apply for an export license.

However, certain criteria have had to be established in order to make sure that licenses will be properly used, after issuance. An illustration of such criteria is the requirement that applicants must have valid orders for export or contracts or other satisfactory arrangements for the delivery of the goods involved. Another illustration is the requirement with respect to some commodities that the applicant present proof that the goods are available to him for shipment if the license is granted. Criteria of this nature also serve enforcement purposes in that they help to prevent trafficking in licenses and speculation by license holders, as well as waste through failure to use all of the limited export quotas.

To carry out the objectives of export controls, other standards or criteria must be applied in selecting applications for consideration. These include, for example, the intended foreign consignee or destination, and the end-use involved. The pertinence of these criteria in terms of foreign policy or national security is self-evident.

To a limited extent and as an anti-inflationary measure, for which export controls are also intended, some applications may be disqualified for exports proposed to be made at obviously excessive prices.

The last sentence of section 4 (b) of H. R. 1661 provides for authority to employ the foregoing standards or criteria and such others as may be deemed necessary to carry out the policies of the act.

DISTRIBUTION OF EXPORT QUOTAS AMONG QUALIFIED APPLICANTS

This problem arises only when the total quantity of a commodity which can be spared for export is substantially less than the total of qualified applications therefor. Prorating limited export quotas equally among all applicants is not a practical or equitable solution to this problem. It would result in alloting to each applicant very small amounts which could not usually be shipped economically. It would also be manifestly unfair to established firms with long records of supplying a major portion of foreign markets. Therefore, the qualifications of the exporter are taken into account. While licenses cannot be approved for all applicants, each class of applicant—merchant exporters as well as producers, and established and new exporters—is given a share of the export quota. The extent of such shares may vary with the commodity involved and the nature of the trading therein. Accordingly, committees of representative businessmen in each major commodity field have been established to advise the Office of International Trade for this purpose. In this connection, attention is directed to the first part of section 4 (b) of H. R. 1661, providing for the application of such criteria and further requiring that there shall be representative trade consultation in determining the proper distribution of licenses.

I would like to call your attention to the difference between the present law and the bill that we have before us.

First, the policies set forth in this bill are practically the same as the policies set forth in the law that was passed by the Eightieth Congress, when the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] was chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House, and sponsored the bill in the House. There is no substantial difference in the policies.

Next, may I invite your attention to the fact that this bill is not opposed by the trade. Further, especially, I desire to invite your attention to the fact that no one has criticized the administration of this law, either present laws or the laws before it. We have had no charges of unfairness in the past, since 1940. Why should we assume that we will not have good administration in the future?

May I invite your attention further to the amazing fact that nine-tenths of the commodities under control during the war have been decontrolled? Putting it another way, only one-tenth the number of commodities formerly under control are now under control, and it is absolutely necessary that some restraints or control be placed over these scarce and vitally essential articles and commodities.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. During the war there were something over 3,000 items under control. Today a little less than 386 commodities are under control.

Mr. PATMAN. That is right; about 10 percent.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Did the gentleman say there has been no criticism of the administration of this act?

Mr. PATMAN. That is right; no criticism has been urged. That is, I mean, no charges of unfair administration. The trade is in favor of it.

Mr. SADOWSKI. None of the exporting or importing companies have criticized the administration of it?

Mr. PATMAN. No; not one.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I have heard and I have received quite a few protests about the administration of the law.

Mr. PATMAN. I am just talking about the testimony before our committee. That is all I have to go by.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I have received and I believe other Members of Congress have received, protests about the administration of the export-import controls.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is giving me the first information I have had on it. I am talking about the information we had before the Committee, the only information I had to rely upon.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I could cite to the gentleman one particular instance.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not want to yield for that purpose right now, if you please; because I am talking about the testimony before the committee and we had a number of witnesses. The trade did not oppose it. There was no criticism of the administration.

REA

There is one group in this country that is vitally interested in the passage of this bill; they are the REA's. More than 600 Rural Electrification Administration cooperatives are vitally interested in the passage of this law. They know that if there is not some control their opportunity to get valuable conductor for electricity will be greatly limited. With proper export control and screening the applications that only permit that to go out of the country that is absolutely necessary, the REA's will get more conductor for electricity. So every REA in this Nation, every one, is vitally interested in the passage of this law.

SMALL BUSINESS

Another group is a small business group. They know that if too much of these scarce items, articles of trade, go outside of the country that the opportunity for small business to get an adequate share of these items will be greatly reduced. The big man can look after himself; he will get plenty through reciprocal trading with the other big concerns of the Nation; he does not want for scarce materials or items; each supplies the other. But it is different with the small businessman. He is the fellow who is first hit when we send out of the country these scarce materials that are needed here to supply the needs of small business. So there are two groups vitally interested in the passage of this law, not weakened like the gentleman from Michigan said, but with good enforcement provisions in it as well. Let me give you an illustration of a law that was passed by the Eightieth Congress that will demonstrate to you why no weak law should ever be passed. If you are going to do anything, do it right with the right kind of provisions for enforcement: The Rent Control Act of 1947, passed during the Eightieth Congress. It gave the tenants no security at all. Oh, the tenant had the right to sue for treble damages, but if he did the landlord had many ways he could evict him; so the result was that the tenant would not dare sue for treble damages, the tenants would not dare resist the landlords if they demanded an increase of 25 or 50 percent. They gladly and willingly paid because they knew they could be evicted under that law. Tenants all over the Nation have paid these illegal rents and the landlords have accepted them. I believe it runs into millions of cases. The law has been generally disregarded for the reason that the tenant has no adequate security if he refused to pay the rent or if he attempted to sue for damages to get it back. He would be put out instantly.

If we vote for a strict and rigid rent-control law it will have the effect not only of rolling rents back but protecting the tenants. You will remember in those illegal cases the awful time we had in the old OPA days. There was no satisfactory way of doing it. So by reason of that weak rent control law we are now called upon to vote not only to roll the rents back in those millions of cases but to arm that tenant with security. He will go to the courts of the country and sue the landlords for treble damages for the past year. He will then be secure. At the present time he is not. That is the result of a weak law not enforced and no adequate means to enforce it. If we are going to have a law let us have one that can be enforced and enforced right.

Much has been said here that the Secretary of Commerce should not be the one to enforce the law. Why, the Eighteith Congress wrote that into the act. It was never there before. Under the law passed by the Eightieth Congress the enforcement of the act was not restricted as it is in this bill to one designated by the President, a department, agency, or official of the Government. Under the old law he could even appoint a clerk or a citizen, one who had never taken the oath and probably would not be required to take it. This restricts it to officials of our Government. So this is a restriction rather than a loose phrase as appears in the existing law.

There are three main provisions in this new bill that will amend existing law which I think are vital.

First, it provides for consultation with industry. When the first OPA bill came up we spent 4 months examining witnesses and interrogating witnesses about price control, four long months, sometimes in the night as well as in the day. At that time I had the privilege of offering the first amendment requiring consultation with industry and that went into the original OPA act. Heretofore, we have not had a compulsory consultation with industry and trade in this law, but our committee in bringing this bill out this time requires it by a provisional on page 3. It is a good one and will protect your REA's and your small businesses and other people who are not a part of the big business interests of our Nation. It protects small business.

The second concerns violations. Heretofore it has been difficult to enforce the law because the penalty was such that a grand jury indictment was necessary before you could proceed in the courts. This changes the penalty so that an information can be filed by the United States district attorney and therefore there should be no delay in the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

Those two provisions are vital—consultation with industry and the penalty provisions changed so that the law can be enforced without being cumbersome as has been the case in the past.

The third is permitting enforcement. They have been hamstrung in the enforcement of this act because they did not have power to go behind the fronts and see who was really making the application for permit. They could not go back and see the people behind him, they could not examine books and papers. This bill, if enacted into law, will give them the enforcement weapons and vehicles that any law-enforcement officer needs in order to adequately enforce a law. It is the usual and customary provision in a law that you really want to enforce. Now, if you want to do it like the Rent Control Act and just make it so weak that it cannot be enforced, just take the teeth out of this provision as stated by the gentleman from Michigan. But, I do not believe that the Members of this House want to do that.

You want a law that can be enforced, and adequately and properly enforced.

The steel situation in this country is still a critical one. We do not have enough steel. We lack 10,000,000 tons of steel this year for maximum employment and production. Do you not think that we should have somebody to carefully screen these applications for export of steel to make sure that it is absolutely necessary that it be exported or that it not be exported at all?

The same is true as to copper, zinc, lead, tin, and aluminum, and especially aluminum that the REA is using now as a conductor.

Then there are certain items of food.

Textiles, I believe, have been taken off the positive list. An item on the positive list is one where it can be exported without a permit to all countries in the world except the R countries, the Russian countries; that is, Russia, her satellites and European countries. They remain on the R list after they have been taken off the positive list, and they should remain there, depending whether or not they can be used for military purposes. That is the object of it.

Some building materials are still critical and we should carefully screen certain items before we permit them to be exported.

The next is petroleum. We have plenty of petroleum now, and that is not a problem, but with certain chemicals and drugs and fertilizers there is. We have some fertilizer that is in supply, but most of the fertilizer generally used in this country is scarce. Certainly we should screen the exportation of fertilizer.

Machinery and equipment and other vital items should be screened in the same way and manner.

Insofar as this bill being a pattern for a socialist state, I notice that the main lobbying organizations now, the National Association of Manufacturers, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and the Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc., and those big groups that spend more money, each one of them, for propaganda, than either the Democratic or the Republican Parties spend, are trying to sell the slogan to the American people, "socialism, socialist government, trying to change our form of Government under Mr. Truman." Well, you know, it is an old trick to use a slogan or word like "socialism" or "communism" or "end of free enterprise" when they know it will take some time and logic and reason to answer such a slogan and word as used.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. That is an old trick. There is no socialism in this administration. It is in the direction against socialism. I will tell you the direction of socialism in this country, and that is monopoly, concentration of wealth, getting units of an industry all in one package. That is a sure step to Government ownership. They are your socialists. This Government is trying to save our country from socialism, and it is strange that the people who are crying out socialism against this administration never raise their voices to the extent of saying that they are against monopoly. They are not fighting monopoly or concentration of wealth; never a word from them along that line.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WHITE of California. I want to make what appears to me a helpful observation in that philosophy, if I may. I notice the gentlemen who cry "Regulated economy" all the while never object when they have a regulation enacted that suits them. For instance, I refer to regulation W of the Federal Reserve Board, which regulates the credit of the little man in this country to suit big business.

Mr. PATMAN. That is right.

Mr. WHITE of California. Regulation W regulates the credit of the country in a way, which suits those gentlemen who ordinarily do not like regulation. They do not complain about that.

Mr. PATMAN. That is right.

Mr. WHITE of California. They do not call that regulation.

Mr. PATMAN. And that same Federal Reserve Board has almost wrecked our country two or three times.

Mr. WHITE of California. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. PATMAN. In 1932, when the banks and the railroads and the insurance companies convinced the then Administration that an RFC should be passed, it was confined only to those three. Remember that. Banks, railroads and insurance companies; and when the RFC opened its doors the first morning, who was down there with hat in hand to get the first money? The biggest bankers and managers of industry and commerce in our Nation. When we put out billions of dollars to them it was all right, there was no socialism there then, no, not at all, but when you come around helping the little fellows, as we did after the Democrats came into power, we changed that RFC act, we enlarged it, and we changed its powers to help the little fellow. Then they began to say socialism.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LYLE. As I understand the gentleman, the main purpose of this legislation and the necessity for it is to protect the American consumer and American business against the shortages that might result from an unregulated export because of high prices and various other things.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LYLE. Second, the purpose is to protect our foreign policy so that we may have some control over the geographic distribution of our exports.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is correct. That policy was stated in the bill passed by the Eightieth Congress and it is the policy that is stated in this bill.

Mr. LYLE. Have the investigations of the gentleman's committee convinced him that these restrictions are necessary?

Mr. PATMAN. They are necessary as long as materials are in short supply, like the materials needed by the Rural Electrification Administration and small business groups generally.

Mr. LYLE. Do you automatically decontrol those items when they are no longer in short supply?

Mr. PATMAN. They will be decontrolled by the President, as heretofore. As evidence, he has decontrolled nine-tenths of them. Only one-tenth remains.

Mr. LYLE. It may then be that long before this statute has expired there will be no controls at all?

Mr. PATMAN. That is right; it is possible.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the bill is passed as is, and that none of these devastating, destructive amendments are adopted.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. The Secretary of Commerce did not decontrol fats and oils, did he?

Mr. PATMAN. He was getting to it as rapidly as possible. Does not the gentleman believe he would have been doing the owners of fats and oils and the producers a great injustice to decontrol them if they did not have a market for them? They had to release the supplies as the ECA money was available to the countries that would take them. Suppose he had thrown all that supply on the market at one time, there is no way of telling how far the market would have gone down and ruined the producers. It would have hurt them much more. They were looking at it from that standpoint all the time, too. They were decontrolling it just as fast as the market could take it, which was in the interest of the producers in this country. When they reach the point where they can take the controls off entirely, as they have done with nine-tenths of the commodities, they take them off.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Is it not true that when they did not do it it cost every householder in this country a great deal more money for pork and beef, because of the fact that they had to sell their fats and oils half again as cheap as they could produce them?

Mr. PATMAN. I would have to study that statement a little bit before I would agree or disagree with the gentleman.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Will the gentleman comment upon his statement about monopolies, with reference to the application of this bill, because this bill does permit a Government monopoly, giving certain individuals a privilege to export, a privilege to do business, when other individuals are denied that privilege.

Mr. PATMAN. Certainly, that is right, just as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in 1932 had the power to deal with certain individuals—individuals who made application. The Department here will deal with individuals who make application, just like under the administration of every law. Certainly there will be no discrimination because none has been pointed out so far.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. There is a decided discrimination between individuals who apply.

Mr. PATMAN. I hope the bill is passed as it is, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE].

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the membership of the House should recognize the splendid talents of the chairman of our committee. I have never observed any individual who is fairer to witnesses and who makes a greater effort to hear all of the evidence, as was true during the hearings on this legislation.

The reason I take this time is to point out that I feel not enough time was given to one very important feature involved in this particular legislation during the hearings, and that concerns export controls on critical and strategic materials which we must try to bring together in this country for stock piling for our national defense.

I shall extend my remarks bearing upon these critical materials that we are trying to stock pile in this country. I call briefly to the attention of the House that among the mining operations being supported at the present time under this particular program is a Chilean copper mine, the largest mine in the world, where virtually all of the production from that mine moves into the United States because of the extreme shortage in this country. There are bauxite operations in Trinidad, the entire output of which comes into the United States.

There is a chrome ore concentrating plant in Turkey, the output of which is under contract to the Federal Bureau of Supply. The stock-pile reserve of these materials is still critically short, and unless this legislation is passed without crippling amendments we can render a great disservice to our country.

The Department of Commerce, through its administration of export controls, is very much concerned with protecting the United States position with respect to critical and strategic materials. In general, export controls are used in two ways for this purpose; in the first place, they are used to limit exports of such materials from the United States; and secondly, they are used to channel exports of other essential supplies to certain mining and production operations in foreign countries upon which the United States depends for imports of critical and strategic materials.

The nonferrous metals—copper, zinc, lead, tin, and aluminum—all of which are in short supply in the United States, are subject to individual export licensing control to all destinations. The worldwide scarcity, the immediate needs of the strategic stock pile, the expanded military programs, the high level of domestic industrial activity, and continued foreign demands, all indicate that the shortage of these materials will not be overcome in the near future and will have to be controlled for export.

The increasing pressure on our supplies of these metals during 1948 was reflected in a tightening of export controls. Aluminum plate, sheet and strip were all added to the list of items controlled for export—so-called positive list—in August 1948 because of rapidly expanding domestic demand and a relatively high level of exports. The quotas which have been established for aluminum will result in a sharp decrease in the rate of exports during this year. Quotas for other nonferrous metals are also being reduced.

The United States has become increasingly dependent on foreign sources to meet a large portion of its nonferrous metal requirements. The high level of consumption during the war and in the postwar period has increased this dependence. In recognition of our reliance on imports for these basic metals, the Department of Commerce has made special efforts to stimulate foreign production and increase the volume of shipments to the United States.

Some special operations and activities in foreign countries are directly or indirectly of such high importance to the United States that they receive special attention in the licensing of scarce materials. In many of these cases, supplies obtained from the United States are used for production of strategic, critical, and essential materials for export to this country, or to other countries which would otherwise require such materials from the United States. In others, such as the maintenance of certain railway systems or power-generating plants, the purpose is to provide at least a minimum degree of support to the basic utilities and facilities of countries chiefly or entirely dependent upon us for needed supplies. In still others we are supporting various construction programs essential to public health in the countries involved.

The issuance of a special project license for such operations and activities does not constitute a commitment to meet all of their requirements for controlled materials. What it does mean is that, in view of the special nature of the projects, applicants submit their requirements for all materials under export control on a single form. This eases the administrative burden on the operating companies as well as on the Government, and permits a unified review of these requirements by licensing officials.

Among the mining operations being supported at the present time are a Chilean copper mine, the largest in the world, virtually all the production of which moves to the United States; bauxite operations in Surinam and Trinidad, the entire output of which comes to the United States; and a chrome-ore concentrating plant in Turkey, the output of which is under contract to the Federal Bureau of Supply, the stock-pile purchasing agency of the United States Government.

Much of the copper, lead, and zinc reaching this country from abroad is produced in mines which depend upon the United States for most or all of their material requirements. Tin production in Bolivia, which accounts for about one-third of our total imports, is also supported by materials received under project licenses. Other important metals, produced for shipment to the United States in approved projects abroad, include vanadium, cadmium, tantalum, tungsten, silver, fluorspar, chrome, high-grade iron ore, and bauxite. United States requirements for these metals, both to meet domestic demands and to add to our strategic stock pile, are at record levels. Imports furnish approximately one-third of our primary supplies of copper, lead, and zinc, and 100 percent of our primary tin supply.

In the case of bauxite, imports account for about 60 percent of United States supply. There are two large bauxite production operations in Surinam, and one in the Netherlands East Indies, which are being supported by the United States. The Federal Bureau of Supply has placed orders with these three projects calling for delivery of large quantities for the bauxite stock pile.

As an auxiliary to the bauxite production in Surinam, a recently qualified project covers the installation of an ore transfer station at Trinidad. This project will permit adequate transfer of ore from shallow draft to seagoing vessels.

Another major project under way involves the mining, transportation, and loading of high-grade iron ore in Venezuela. This ore will have an iron content of about 65 percent compared to 51 percent for the ore now being shipped from the Mesabi-Great Lakes region of the United States. This project will require large quantities of steel products in the next three quarters. If these requirements can be met, it is expected that iron ore will begin moving to the United States from Venezuela by mid-1949 at the rate of 2,000,000 tons a year, representing a substantial increase in the United States supply.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Can the gentleman tell us how export controls and exports would have anything to do with imports of copper from Chile?

Mr. DEANE. As I understand the program, the advisory boards advising with the departmental organizations directing the program enter into conference to determine the extent to which it is necessary to control the export of critical materials in short supply.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman is speaking of imports of copper and other strategic metals from foreign countries, particularly South America. I cannot understand and I wish he would explain how export controls on exports from this country would have anything to do with the importation of these critical materials from those foreign countries.

Mr. DEANE. The gentleman is asking a good question and it is involved in this discussion. We are in the import business to the extent indicated because we simply do not have these critical materials. But I contend this legislation will protect the important stockpile of these critical materials which are necessary for our national defense program, and the bill should pass without amendments.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee; I am sure that in the remarks made by the gentleman from Michigan, the former chairman of this committee, there are a number of items that certainly ought to be clarified before we go into the reading of the bill and the discussion of the amendments that he has suggested he may offer.

In regard to that phase, in carrying out the purposes of export controls, a number of criteria or standards have had to be established for the approval or disapproval of export applications. The problem varies completely with each important commodity. Experience has shown that there must be permitted certain administrative flexibility in determining the proper criteria to meet the changing supply and market conditions, as well as the current foreign policy and national security objectives. So it is not too easy to lay down a rule.

Experiences in carrying out the provisions of this act by the Department have led us to the point where, in asking for a continuation of this act, certain specific language should be inserted, not with the object of putting the clamps down, but to spell out a little more clearly so that everyone who is an applicant, everyone who is eligible to apply for an export license, may know more clearly just what the rules are and whether or not he is getting a fair deal under the provisions of the act. An illustration to this effect is the requirement in respect to some commodities, that the applicant present proof that the goods are available to him for shipment, if the license is granted. They should be in the nature of certain enforecement purposes, so that they may help to prevent trafficking in licenses, and speculation by license holders. That experience, the Department has had some dealings with. There have been charges and accusations made that the end-use provisions were not being carried out, as well as waste through failure to use all of the limited export quotas because a great many of these allocations were not being taken up. So it has been necessary, in presenting a continuation of this measure, to spell out and clarify, and to write into the act a new section, section 4, dealing with the enforcement provisions; dealing with the provisions of consultation and standards, so that the Department may have a basis or objective other than that which has been in the act at the present time. These matters are very pertinent to a successful operation of a control act of this character.

Another is in the distribution of export quotas among the eligible or qualified applicants. This problem arises when the total quantity of a commodity which can be spared for export is substantially less than the total of qualified applications therefor. Prorating limited export quotas equally among all applicants is not a practical or equitable solution to this problem. It would result in allotting to each applicant very small amounts, which could not usually be shipped economically. It would also be manifestly unfair to establish firms with long records of supplying a major portion of the markets, to deny them export quotas. So it is necessary to carry out the language in that respect.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is not that the very thing that creates a market and creates prices? If there is competition by these exporters, and one bids above the other, does that not make the price?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Of course, bidding in foreign exchange is different than that insofar as the domestic economy is concerned. I am speaking with reference to large-scale exports.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does not the scheme that the gentleman has outlined operate as a price-fixing control?

Mr. BUCHANAN. In some instances it might get down to that particular point, where it will have some effect upon the price.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If we deny one applicant this license, naturally he is eliminated from the market, and his price does not establish the price of the goods.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Of course, as the gentleman understands, the quotas are set and applications are administered in an attempt to be fair and equitable to all concerned.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is the gentleman cognizant of the press reports of the discriminations and frauds that have been practiced under the provisions of this act in the export business?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is why we are asking for a spelling out of clarifying language as far as the enforcement provisions of the act are concerned. That is why there may be some objections and some amendments, because the administration is concerned to see to it that the provisions are carried out and the end use of the product reaches the destination which it was intended to.

(Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was granted permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. May I preface my inquiry by stating that I am in full accord with export control of materials in short supply. I am also in full accord with conferring the power on the President. With this in mind, I am concerned in knowing whether the materials that we are here trying to conserve may not be exported under the power which we some days ago conferred upon the President by the provisions of the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I may answer the gentleman by saying that there is no direct relationship between the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act and the Export Control Act. The reciprocal trade agreements are entered into on a bilateral basis. In the case of the enforcement of the Trade Agreements Act, if it concerns goods in scarce supply they would be regulated under the terms and provisions of the Export Control Act. Cognizance is taken of the existing scarce materials at the time these trade agreements are entered into. In this connection it is interesting to note that in the next 2 or 3 months hearings will be held in continuation of previously existing agreements; and of course at that time, at the time of those hearings, at the time of the consultations for further agreements, these items listed on which export controls are necessary will be taken into consideration.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. To the extent that export controls are used, is it not in direct opposition to the intent of the reciprocal trade agreements program which is principally to lessen the barriers to international trade?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I may say to the gentleman, it will augment, supplement, and carry through the successful negotiation.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. The State Department approved the bill. It will not interfere with the reciprocal trade agreements in any way. We cleared everything through the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time on our side.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Export Control Act of 1949."

FINDINGS

(a) Certain materials continue in short supply at home and abroad so that the quantity of United States exports and their distribution among importing countries affect the welfare of the domestic economy and have an important bearing upon the fulfillment of the foreign policy of the United States.

(b) The unrestricted export of materials without regard to their potential military significance may affect the national security.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"Section 6 (d) of the act of July 2, 1940 (54 Stat. 714), as amended, is amended by striking out 'February 28, 1949,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'February 28, 1950.'

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President in the exercise of the powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon him by the act of July 2, 1940, as amended, is authorized to use price criteria in the licensing of exports, either by giving preference among otherwise comparable applications to those which provide for the lowest prices, or, in exceptional circumstances, by fixing reasonable mark-ups in export prices over domestic prices."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this is offered in substitution of the whole bill and, if adopted, will continue for 1 year export controls exactly as they are at the present time. It will also be noted that in the substitute provision is made for continuance of the authority to use price criteria in determining to whom these licenses should be granted.

Let me reiterate that this law has been in effect since 1940. An export-control program has been necessary and I believe it is desirable to continue export controls as they now exist for what might be considered a reasonable length of time. Probably a year is a reasonable length of time. I wish we might make that shorter because it is our intention, as expressed in a great many acts of Congress, to remove controls just as rapidly as they can be removed and with as little shock to the domestic economy as is possible. So it is advisable to continue export controls until the international situation adjusts itself and we have more stability in international markets than we have at the present time.

If the controls which are requested in the pending bill were necessary to the effective enforcement of the act, of course, someone during the last 7 years would have asked the Congress to expand the export-control powers, during these years. The war is over. It has been 3½ years now since cessation of hostilities. We have expended $5,000,000,000 or will have expended $5,000,000,000 to aid in the rehabilitation of western European countries. We have invested over $2,800,000,000 in a stabilization program for Great Britain and we see a great many favorable results from the investment of those funds in world stability. So we should be thinking of terminating export controls instead of expanding them, the same as we have been thinking since cessation of hostilities that it is better to take these controls off if we are going to preserve the American free-enterprise system than to add to them and add to the uncertainty of the situation.

Already we are catching up with demand in many fields in the United States. We are told that in the leather industry, in the textile industry, in the radio industry, and in certain branches of agriculture we have virtually saturated the markets. Let me make this statement to provoke thought, that with our tremendous capacity to produce in America, were it not for our exports we could not long preserve the American standard of living.

So we must readjust our sights and think in terms of expanding markets for American goods abroad above the normal demand, and we should give encouragement to the production of American goods to meet foreign demands, and there should be no unusual restrictions upon domestic production. It is necessary to meet foreign demands, it is necessary to find new markets abroad for American goods if we are to maintain the American standard of living.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, the purpose of this amendment in striking out all after the enacting clause is to destroy the careful work of the Committee on Banking and Currency in trying to rewrite an old wartime law which has been many, many times amended and changed during the course of years that it was on the books to deal with varied degrees of national emergency and circumstance.

I think the committee did a very good job in bringing out a rewrite of this bill to protect the security and the economy of the United States of America against danger of over exportation of scarce items. It provides a modern version of what is needed in an export control law in the light of postwar experience, based carefully on hearings by the Committee on Banking and Currency and on testimony before us by all interested parties who cared to appear.

The gentleman from Michigan, whose committee under his chairmanship reported a bill designed to effectuate largely the same purposes which this bill seeks to accomplish, does not like the product of this committee's work.

On that he is entitled to have his say, but I think it would be much fairer to the House, it would increase the understanding more of the House, if he would take the bill, as I am sure he intends to do when his amendment this time to strike all after the enacting clause is defeated, and then introduce his separate and individual amendment, to change the specific and individual portions of this bill which he has objection to.

I think the House can vote much clearer upon these specific individual objections of the gentleman from Michigan than we can in taking a wrapped-up package containing six or eight important changes.

I tried to follow during the course of his argument here under general debate the extent of his amendments but I am not certain, even with the experience of the hearings that I have had, that I clearly understand them all.

So, in the interest of good legislative procedure, in the interest of the House being well informed, I think we should vote down this catch-all amendment to strike everything after the enacting clause. We want to enact a bill with due regard to whether it contains the necessary improvements that are dictated by the light of experience and trial and error that I believe this bill provides.

I do not think anyone can question the value that export controls, properly operated and properly handled in an administrative way, have to the security, and to the economy of the United States.

One of the greatest problems we had when we had the Marshall plan before us was the fear largely by many members of the gentleman's own party that we would ruin this Nation's economy because of unregulated exportation of goods in short supply.

Constantly I have heard on the floor of this House the fears that we will export to Russia or to Communist-dominated countries matériel which would be helpful to them in making war against the democracy of this Nation.

Members of the House, the sole purpose of this bill is to protect the security and economy of the United States of America. It seeks to help make the Marshall plan work in the recovery of Europe without devastating our own economy by exporting materials in short supply. We cannot afford to turn to a haphazard system where the highest bidder can withdraw from our American market goods in extremely scarce supply and remain on an even economic keel.

So until we get greater production and a greater abundance of those scarce materials—and this bill applies only to materials in scarce supply—I think you will need adequate export controls.

I think it would be a shame indeed to waste the time of the great Committee on Banking and Currency and the time of the men who have handled this export control so satisfactorily that there were no witnesses appearing before the committee to challenge their work.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman state that this bill can apply only to materials in short supply?

Mr. MONRONEY. It certainly does apply to materials only in short supply or to a war-making end use.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman state that if we have a long supply of any given product in this country the administration cannot impose an export control thereon?

Mr. MONRONEY. It cannot under the terms of this bill. If the gentleman will read the bill, he will find that it is properly guarded in the terms of this bill. No amount of seeing ghosts under the bed, no amount of casting suspicion, can remove the fact that this bill is designed to apply only to items in scarce supply or those which might be useful for war purposes in Communist-dominated countries.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this bill does give the administration the power, based upon the findings of the President, to impose export quotas not alone upon materials which are necessary to our national defense, not alone upon materials in which we are in short supply, but upon any other exportable commodities or products of our industries, regardless of their nonstrategic importance, and even though in great oversupply.

I have read the bill, and certainly do not accord with the interpretation of the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma. I find nothing in the bill which puts a limitation upon the findings of the President. Any findings he makes would justify within the terms of this bill export quotas upon any product of our industry.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is absolutely correct. There is nothing in the bill which limits the control of exports to goods in short supply. The gentleman from Iowa in committee offered an amendment to the bill restricting the operation of these controls in cases where goods are in surplus. I think probably the gentleman from Oklahoma is confusing the debate on that amendment with the general provisions of this bill, because at no time since 1940 have there been any restrictions whatsoever upon the commodities upon which the President could levy export controls.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman. Certainly, it seems to me that in this day of our expanding production at home we should not, 3½ years after the close of the war, grant new and greater powers to the Executive, to control our industries' sales.

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TALLE. If the law had been administered in such a manner as to prevent the piling up of surpluses of exportable goods in this country, I would not have gone to the trouble of preparing a speech on that very point. The law has not been so administered. That was the burden of my message in general debate, and that is why I stated I would offer an amendment which is identical with an amendment enacted in the Senate. The House bill and the Senate bill are identical, except that the latter contains an amendment which I stated at the outset of general debate I would offer, so that agricultural products including fats and oils, might get proper consideration.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's answer is indeed complete. We do have an exportable surplus of fats and oils, yet the quota is applied today, thereby contradicting the gentleman from Oklahoma's interpretation.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Although fats and oils are taken off the positive list, they remain on the R list, that is, they cannot be exported to Russia or any of her satellite countries without a permit under this law. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. It is. For strategic and military reasons. Last week we saw fit to endorse the activities of our State Department and our Government under the so-called reciprocal-trade-agreements policy with respect to international trade. The principal purpose of that bill, as it has been described to us repeatedly in years past, has been to break down the barriers to trade that exist between the many nations of the world.

After these 14 or 15 years of so-called progress under the reciprocal-trade-agreements program we find ourselves today in a situation where among all the nations of the world there are more restrictions by way of quotas and all kinds of artificial procedures to limit the free interchange of trade. We have more restrictions today than we ever had when the old tariff laws were in effect.

Now the United States Government, which has been the leader of reciprocity in foreign trade, at a time when the war is over, seeks to impose a new barrier against free trade. We find ourselves passing a law today which gives our Government the power to stop the export of any and all products of our industries to any and all nations of the world. Gentlemen, that is not consistent with what we did last week.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON] has expired.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it has been stated by the gentleman from Texas that edible oils are now on the R list. The restrictions have been taken off as far as the positive list is concerned. That means that edible oils may be sent to the so-called satellite countries, providing certain conditions are met. Just how does that work? Let us see what happens. Last summer Poland was short of cotton. The Polish mills at Lodz were standing idle for 6 weeks. They could not get American cotton. They had to shop all over the world to get some cotton. We had cotton in great supply. The Polish Nation finally obtained American cotton from England. How? By paying 30 percent more than they should have paid if they could have purchased it directly from us and as they should have been able to purchase that cotton directly, since the cotton was used to make overalls and make clothing for children and the people generally. Oil is going to be placed on the same list. Sure, they will be able to buy it. They will need oil, say, in Czechoslovakia, Poland and Yugoslavia. They are behind the iron curtain. They are satellite countries. These products are on the R list, but before you can get an export license here to get even those things that are in short supply and which are not commodities that would be used in war, those restrictions are so great that it is impossible for you to get them in the normal and natural course of business.

So those countries will just have to go to our European brokers, England, Italy, and Belgium. They will have to go to these European countries. They will have to go to our brokers to buy these commodities. What a silly situation for America to be in. It is repugnant to me to see our business being carried on on that sort of basis. I voted for these controls and supported them all the way through during the war. I thought they were necessary. But now the war is over. Sometime we are going to do business on a business basis. Sometime we are going to go out in the world to recapture our own markets and we are not going to be dependent upon England or any other country to say, "You cannot do business with this or that country directly, but I will act as your broker."

I have a great suspicion that somebody is making a lot of money when you have an overage of 30 percent commission that is being paid by these countries in eastern Europe, to buy our goods. Someone is making an awful lot of profit and I think it is an illegitimate profit. I think that business could be carried on directly between the United States and the other countries of Europe which need these commodities.

Let me mention the matter of streptomycin, which is used in the cure of tuberculosis. There is a terrible amount of tuberculosis in Poland which was caused by the war. Poland has seven times as much tuberculosis as they normally have or seven times as great as we have in this country. They need that medicine. I was amazed to find that you must get a permit to ship streptomycin to the people in Poland in order to help them combat the dread disease of tuberculosis.

Some of these restrictions are cruel and inhuman. It is all right to have controls in wartime. It is all right to have controls to protect the national security, but to have such silly controls as we are now permitting the Department to use does not make any sense.

I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman would not think of sending munitions of war to Russia?

Mr. SADOWSKI. No.

Mr. PATMAN. Cotton is used to make gunpowder. Gunpowder is used in war.

Mr. SADOWSKI. They wanted this cotton to make overalls and to make clothes for the people of Poland to wear. Their textile mills were closed for 6 weeks.

Mr. PATMAN. But they could make gunpowder out of it.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Well, they did get the cotton. They got it from South America, from Argentina, and from Mexico, and they did not make gunpowder with it. I was told that they will keep on buying cotton there, and we can keep on selling our cotton to England and a few ECA countries in the future. That is not good business for the United States and we cannot do business forever on taxpayers' dollars, with ECA countries only. We should be able to sell our cotton wherever we want to, without using Great Britain as our broker, or any other foreign country.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADOWSKI. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Is not the gentleman pointing out the very difficulties that are attendant on peacetime economy controls?

Mr. SADOWSKI. Yes. I say we should have controls for the national security, but controls over normal business to be used for the purpose of giving an advantage to foreign brokers and speculators as a result of those controls is un-American. We are subsidizing international thievery and bringing discredit to American business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI] has expired.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I can well understand the necessity for some export controls at the present time, but it does seem to me that this bill should give us some concern.

I must say I am not altogether clear as to why a bill of this kind emanates from the Committee on Banking and Currency, because it relates primarily to exports. Certainly, I should think that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce might have something to say about legislation of this kind. I refer to rule XI (k), which gives that committee jurisdiction over foreign commerce generally and over bills relating to the Department of Commerce. The only justification for the reference of this bill appears to be the error in the reference of preceding bills.

Last year the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce did hold some hearings on the actual operation of export control legislation. I can assure you that no more interesting hearings were held before that committee or more revealing, or I might say more disturbing. It seems to me quite apparent that export controls can be very arbitrarily and tyranically employed in two ways. First, internally, with respect to individual American exporting corporations, or corporations that would like to export: It is possible for a governmental agent, the Secretary of Commerce, to play favorites in all kinds of most subtle ways, and to do great mischief without any relief being afforded to the injured parties.

It is also perfectly possible to employ export controls to nations which are singularly dependent upon our economy, in such a way as to coerce them to do this, that, or the other thing, even in the General Assembly of the United Nations. I have even heard whispers of something of that sort having occurred.

When you get to such very broad powers as are found in section 6 of this act and section 7, which I do not understand—I do not understand why the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act should be excepted from this bill—I am very troubled. I would not vote for a bill which had in it any such sections as 6 and 7.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. The gentleman touched upon the subject I was going to mention in asking the gentleman to yield; that is, the provision in this bill which calls for the exemption from these controls of the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act. With that paragraph in this bill it seems to me that we have done nothing more than give practically an unlimited blanket authority for the control of exports. But if the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act, as was so clearly brought out in the hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, if those provisions were followed, if the Administrative Procedure Act were followed, then many of the objections that we find to the pending bill might be removed. The paragraph exempting a perfectly good law passed in 1946 completely removes the restrictions from the administration of this particular act.

Mr. HALE. I think the gentleman is entirely correct.

I was quite amazed by the statement earlier this afternoon of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] that he had heard no criticism of the actual operation of the present law. I should be very glad indeed to show him a copy of the hearings last spring before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALE. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Section 6 relates to enforcement. I cannot understand why the gentleman would be opposed to the effective enforcement of the law. This provision deals with black marketeers. If you want a good law and want to abolish the black market and punish the black marketeers, the only way to do it is through the provisions of section 6, according to my mind.

Mr. HALE. If the gentleman thinks that the powers contained in the last sentence of section 6 (a), in subsection (b), and subsection (c) are normal and salutary powers, I just cannot follow him in any degree. On the contrary, they are sections which confer arbitrary and oppressive power on any department, agency, or official exercising functions under the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 73, noes 98.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. The Congress hereby declares that it is the policy of the United States to use export controls to the extent necessary (a) to protect the domestic economy from the excessive drain of scarce materials and to reduce the inflationary impact of abnormal foreign demand; (b) to further the foreign policy of the United States and fulfill its international responsibilities; and (c) to exercise the necessary vigilance over exports from the standpoint of their significance to the national security.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "fulfill" and insert in lieu thereof "to aid in fulfilling."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in reference to the shortage of nitrogenous fertilizers in the southwestern part of the United States. I dare say there is not a Representative from any rural area who does not have similar problems to what confront us in the southwestern part of this country.

Mr. Chairman, during the course of the early winter, I received many appeals from farmers for help in obtaining the customary allocations of nitrogen fertilizers needed on the farm. These appeals came from many sources, but I can recall that one appeal came from the Department of Agriculture's Production and Marketing Administration committee. This appeal is so strongly worded that I am setting it forth in detail at this point in my remarks:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Shreveport, La., December 21, 1948.

The Caddo Parish Agricultural Conservation Association Committee at a meeting on December 12, 1948, made the following resolution:

"Whereas the shortage of nitrogen fertilizer in this area is more acute than at any time in the history of this part of the country;

"Whereas in cooperation with Congressman OVERTON BROOKS we have canvassed the distributors and fertilizer manufacturers in this area with reference to the nitrogen fertilizer available: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Agricultural Conservation Association Committee of Caddo Parish, La., That we ask both public and private manufacturers of fertilizer to increase the supply of nitrogen fertilizer to at least the extent of giving the farmers in this area the supply normally available for crop production and that this fertilizer be made available immediately or in ample time for the spring crop, work on which has already begun."

R. L. DURHAM,
Caddo Parish Administrative Officer.

Some time following this, I received a strong letter from the Caddo Parish police jury signed by T. D. Connell, Jr., making a similar appeal.

With these appeals before me, I immediately took this matter up with the Secretary of Agriculture, asking him for this study of the problem and his assistance. In due course, I received from the Under Secretary of Agriculture, the Honorable A. J. Loveland, a courteous reply. I reproduce this letter herein:

FEBRUARY 3, 1949.

HON OVERTON BROOKS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BROOKS: This is in reply to your letter of January 28, enclosing a letter from Mr. T. D. Connell, Jr., of Shreveport, La., and a resolution from farmers in Caddo Parish pertaining to supplies of ammonium nitrate in northern Louisiana. We also have your second letter of the same date enclosing a telegram from Lion Oil Co. on the subject.

With respect to steps which might be taken to divert supplies to the area in question, there are no governmental control or directive powers applicable to the domestic distribution of nitrogen fertilizers produced at private commercial plants. Proprietors of these plants have the responsibility for choice of market areas they serve, selection of trade channels, and quantities supplied to their customers.

Under the provisions of Public Law 793, a limited tonnage of anhydrous ammonia produced at plants operated by the Army is being distributed by the Department of Commerce to eligible producers of nitrogen materials for conversion to nitrogenous fertilizers suitable for direct application. This arrangement was effected with a view toward increasing the 1948-49 domestic supply of nitrogen for farmers.

The enclosed press release of the Department of Commerce gives details of this program for the first 3 months of 1949. Among the nitrogen producers participating in the current distribution of the Army ammonia are the Lion Oil Co. at El Dorado, Ark., Commercial Solvents Corp. at Sterlington, La., and Mathieson Chemical Corp. at Lake Charles, La.

Sincerely yours,

A. J. LOVELAND,
Under Secretary.

In due course, I received a telegram from the Lion Oil Co., by N. H. Eason, and I set forth this telegram in detail herein:

ELDORADO, ARK., January 25, 1949.

Hon. OVERTON BROOKS,
Member of Congress:

Retel our production ammonium nitrate fertilizer 1948-49 curtailed approximately 15 percent under last year and approximately 30 percent under 1946-47. Supplies this material insufficient to satisfy demands throughout the southeastern and southwestern territories. We are making allotments to our customers as fairly and equitably as we know how, considering our reduced production. We regret exceedingly our inability to adequately supply your good constituents.

LION OIL CO.,
N. H. EASON.

It is obvious that this company, which normally supplies north Louisiana with much of its nitrogen fertilizer, is not producing the normal amount of ammonium nitrate. According to the telegram, the amount produced is 15 percent under last year and 30 percent under production of 1946-47. I have made similar appeals for more fertilizer for our farmers to the Phillips Fertilizer Co., of Bartlesville, Okla., and to the Spencer Fertilizer Co. The Spencer Co. has apparently withdrawn from serving its normal area in north Louisiana due to the fac' that it cannot adequately take care of its customers closer home and my appeal to the Phillips Fertilizer Co. has produced no results.

While I am continuing to work upon this matter, the spring-planting season moves rapidly to an early close. Soon most of the planting will have been completed and the size and type of farm production will have been seriously affected by the failure of an adequate supply of ammonium nitrate fertilizer. I am not unmindful that this country is very short of fertilizers. I, in fact, am informed that the world is short of plant food. I know the problem of the Secretary of Agriculture is not an easy one in this emergency, and I feel that private manufacturers are producing to the limit. But the fact is, Mr. Chairman, a serious shortage exists. In north Louisiana, it is much worse than it was last year.

This bill will soon pass this House and will go to the Senate on its way to become the law of the land. It will give our Government power to control exports of nitrates and thereby make them available for our own people. In this event, the Department of Agriculture and Department of Commerce will have power to help, and I hope will lose no time in helping our farmers solve one of their greatest present problems.

Mr. Chairman, as far as nitrogen fertilizer in the southwest farm country is concerned our farmers are on starvation rations. They need assistance. If this legislation will help prevent the export of fertilizer to foreign countries at a time when we need it so desperately, it could really help our farmers in the southwestern part of the United States.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I concur in what the gentleman has said with reference to the shortage of nitrogenous fertilizer, not only in the southwest but throughout the country. The gentleman has referred to the production of nitrogen fertilizer in my own district, in my own home town, as a matter of fact, by the Lion Chemical Co., and indicated that the production of nitrogen has been reduced during the present year by 15 to 30 percent; but he failed to say that the reason for this reduction in production this year is because there is an expansion program going on at this plant; consequently it is necessary to curtail production until this expansion program is completed. At the end of this year, perhaps in September, this expansion program will be completed and it will then increase production of nitrogen fertilizer by some 35 percent at this plant.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman has made a very valuable contribution. I might add, too, that the Lion Oil Co. is doing whatever it can to relieve this situation. As the gentleman has indicated one of the plants of the Lion Oil Co. situated in his district is undergoing extensive repairs and is closed down temporarily.

Mr. HARRIS. Not necessary repairs; it is an expansion program adding to the production of the plant.

Mr. BROOKS. I will accept the suggestion of the gentleman. It also operates a plant in my particular district which is working to capacity, and I think the Lion Co. is doing what it can to relieve the situation. The fact is, however, during this planting season the shortage in ammonium nitrate is most acute.

I have a letter here from the Phillips Chemical Co., of Bartlesville, Okla., in which it indicates it is able to do nothing to relieve this situation either.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

AUTHORITY

SEC. 3. (a) To effectuate the policies set forth in section 2 hereof, the President may prohibit or curtail the exportation from the United States, its Territories, and possessions, of any articles, materials, or supplies, including technical data, except under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe. To the extent necessary to achieve effective enforcement of this act, such rules and regulations may apply to the financing, carriage, and other servicing of exports and the participation therein by any person.

(b) The President may delegate the power, authority, and discretion conferred upon him by this act to such departments, agencies, or officials of the Government as he may deem appropriate.

With the following committee amendment:

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 2, line 19, after the word "prescribe", strike out the remainder of lines 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes that that is not a proper substitute for the committee amendment. The gentleman may offer that amendment separately.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWN of Georgia: Page 3, after line 2, insert the following new subsection:

"(c) The authority conferred by this section shall not be exercised with respect to any agricultural commodity, including fats and oils, during any period for which the supply of such commodity is determined by the Secretary of Agriculture to be in excess of the requirements of the domestic economy, except to the extent required to effectuate the policies set forth in clause (b) or clause (c) of section 2 hereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. The committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. TALLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TALLE. I followed the reading of the gentleman's amendment as closely as I could when the Clerk read it, and I find that it is identical with the amendment which I proposed in connection with my remarks in general debate and which I stated I would introduce at the proper time. It appears to me, therefore, that there is unanimous agreement and that the Brown-Talle amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HOEVEN. Do I understand that the committee has accepted the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Yes, the amendment I offered. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE] stated he expected to offer the same amendment. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE] and I fully agree on the amendment.

Mr. HOEVEN. It is the same amendment that was proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The same amendment as adopted by the Senate.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to learn that the Committee on Banking and Currency has agreed to accept the amendment just proposed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. It is the same amendment heretofore referred to in general debate, which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE] was ready to present. No doubt the Banking and Currency Committee agreed to accept the amendment for fear that a failure to do so might jeopardize the passage of the bill.

The Committee on Agriculture, of which the gentleman from Iowa now addressing you is a member, did much to help create the favorable sentiment for the amendment in question. Taking immediate notice of the critical oil and fats situation some weeks ago, the Committee on Agriculture conferred with representatives of the Department of Agriculture, Department of Commerce, the office of Mr. Paul Hoffman, Director of ECA, and the chairman of the Inter-Agency Committee on Fats and Oils. The net result of these conferences was a resolution unanimously adopted by the Committee on Agriculture on February 8, 1949, requesting the Secretary of Commerce to immediately remove all requirements for individual licenses for exportation of edible fats and oils to any approved foreign destination. A few days later the Secretary of Commerce announced that all export controls had been removed on edible fats and oils. I think Members of Congress should know of the important part taken by the Committee on Agriculture in bringing this matter to a successful conclusion.

The farmers of Iowa have been very much concerned over the decline of lard prices, which, of course, reflects on the price of live hogs. The reason for this decline in the price of lard is the supply. The supplies of lard in cold storage on January 1, 1949, were 112,000,000 pounds as compared with a 5-year average of 105,000,000 pounds on that date. Revised Department of Agriculture estimates indicate that we will produce 683,000,000 pounds for this current quarter. Lard is a cheap source of food and is one of the best commodities the Europeans could purchase since they have a great need for animal fats. The farmers of Iowa and the country will be pleased to learn that the critical situation as it involves fats and oils has been somewhat alleviated by the action of the committee taken today in accepting the Brown-Talle amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 2, line 19, after "prescribe." strike out the remainder of line 19 and all of lines 20, 21, 22, and 23.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the spelling of the word "precribe" in line 19 be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was discussed in the general debate. Attention was called to the fact that this language gives the administrators of the act some very new and unusual powers, powers that they have not had since the inception of the authority to control exports was granted to the administration in 1940.

For example, they have never had the authority heretofore to regulate the financing of exports or the transporting of exports or the servicing of exports. Understand that this authority is so broad that the participation in the financing, participation in the transporting, and participation in the servicing of exports may be controlled. I do not think as a matter of sound policy and in keeping with the American system we should at this time, any more than we did back in 1940, grant this unusual power. Servicing of exports? Servicing of financing of exports? Servicing of the transporting of exports? Very new, very far-reaching powers.

Are not you gentlemen on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce interested in the power which is being granted to this administration to service the transporting of exports carried on the railroads, the motor trucks, and in the air? I think you should be.

I think this amendment goes right to the heart of the American system. Surely if these controls were not found necessary during the war, during the preparedness period before the war, and during the 3½ years of the postwar adjustment period, they cannot by any stretch of the imagination be justified at this particular time. Herein lies the core of the argument, that we decide today whether we carry through with the American system, whether we perpetuate the system which has made America as great as it is, or whether we delegate again to the Administration, not in war but in peace, new and unusual powers such as the Chief Executive was not given even in a time of raging war. Powers by which he can control our economy. Why do you want this power? Is it to satisfy a lust, or is it necessary? Well, that question is easily answered. Surely it is not necessary or the administration would have asked for it in the 7 years during which this law has been in effect.

The gentleman from Oklahoma was just a little bit wrong when he said that this law has been amended and reamended, and so forth. This law has not been amended except once since 1940 and that was to add the provision that price criteria might be taken into consideration in the granting of export licenses. These powers are new and unusual and go to the heart of the question as to whether the American system is going to be perpetuated.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency was serious when he intimated that the majority members of the committee are lustful or seeking power or attempting to vest power where it ought not to be. The purpose of this amendment, like that which was rejected a few moments ago, is to reject export controls. If you adopt this amendment you might just as well forget about the bill. The present bill is a codification of all of the provisions now existing in various sections of the law applying to export controls. Instead of amending the various bills, we have simply taken, with but one exception, all of that and put it into one law, which you now have before you.

The policy is very plainly stated in section 2 and the authority in section 3 says in so many words "to effectuate the purposes" as set forth in section 2, which says "the President may prohibit, and curtail the exportation" of goods.

Then you come to these important words "to the extent necessary to achieve effective enforcement of this act, such rules and regulations may apply to financing, transporting, and other servicing of exports."

If you are not going to have the power to make rules and regulations so that you can enforce this act, then let us not pass it. If we are going to pass it, and I think we are, then we must have rules and regulations which will apply to every phase of exports.

In the hearings before both Houses it was brought out that the purpose of these rules and regulations will be limited to the enforcement of this act and the policy of the act is "to protect the domestic economy," "to further the foreign policy of the country," and, more important, "to exercise the necessary vigilance over exports from the standpoint of their significance to national security."

When Mr. Bell, Acting Director of the Office of International Trade, was before our committee, he was asked this question:

Do you not think it might be sufficient at this time to extend these controls, limiting them to security purposes?

Mr. Bell responded:

In our judgment we could not. There are many items in such short supply that we could not do so. In fact, the trend right here in Congress is to insist that we have been too liberal in the shipment of many items, such as steel, and so forth. The complaint has been that we have been too liberal on allocations, and that some things should be on the positive list that are not on the positive list, and there is equal pressure from domestic interests, particularly, to add things to the positive list.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact that if this language is stricken, it will encourage the black market and encourage black marketeers?

Mr. MULTER. Yes, not only will it do that, but it will make the enforcement of the act utterly impossible. If you cannot call upon the banks to give you information as to how these exports are being financed and as to whether or not the declarations on which they are borrowing money to make the shipment are in accordance with the license, how can you enforce the act? The same with transport and the same with servicing of the exports.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. The gentleman will recall that a specific instance was given to our committee, in which an export license was given for the exporting of empty bottles, and because they were unable to get the letters of credit and find out what the true transaction was, valuable material that was not proper to export was contained in the empty bottles. That is one illustration of how this new provision will be effective in carrying out the purposes of the act.

Mr. MULTER. I thank the gentleman for that valuable contribution. That is typical of why we need regulations that will apply to the financing, transporting, and servicing of these export items. The Department must be able to get all of the information relative to these transactions.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. With reference to the word "financing," of course we realize that rules and regulations are necessary but it says, "to the financing of exports." Does not the gentleman believe that is a little broad?

Mr. MULTER. It is not broad if you read together with it the beginning of the sentence, which is, "To the extent necessary to achieve effective enforcement of this act the rule may apply to financing."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 66, noes 89.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSULTATION AND STANDARDS

SEC. 4. (a) In determining which articles, materials, or supplies shall be controlled hereunder, and in determining the extent to which exports thereof shall be limited, any department or agency making these determinations shall seek information and advice from the several executive departments and independent agencies concerned with aspects of our domestic and foreign policies and operations having an important bearing on exports.

(b) In authorizing exports, full utilization of private competitive trade channels shall be encouraged insofar as practicable, giving consideration to the interests of small business, merchant exporters as well as producers, and established and new exporters, and provision shall be made for representative trade consultation to that end. In addition, there may be applied such other standards or criteria as may be deemed necessary by the head of such department or agency to carry out the policies of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 7, strike out the word "or" after the word "department" and after the word "agency" insert "or official."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 20, after the word "agency" insert "or official."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 3, line 17, after the word "end", strike out the remainder of line 17 and all of lines 18, 19, 20, and 21.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would strike out the language on page 3, line 17, which reads as follows:

In addition there may be applied such other standards or criteria as may be deemed necessary by the head of any department, or agency, or official, to carry out the policies of this act.

I know how useless it is for me to stand up and argue under this situation, but what we are doing here today might create such uncertainty as to add to the economic dilemma in which we might find ourselves shortly. This Congress can bring on a depression; this Congress, by the creation and maintenance of uncertainty in respect to policy, can discourage the production of goods. You on the left have the responsibility. Historically, this language has been controversial since the act was first passed; historically, you have kept it out, and we helped you keep it out. By the offering of this amendment those of us on this side are merely being consistent with what this Congress has been doing under your leadership for 5 years and under Republican leadership for 2 years since 1940. Now, are you going to reverse your policy of 7 years?

Why do you ask for this power? May I propound that inquiry again? To what use are you going to put this new power? What standards are you going to set up for exports? You never asked for this authority before; what criteria are you going to say should be applied to the export of goods? What standards are you setting up in respect to the standards which the head of a department, or an agency, or an official must set up in his regulations before an export license may be granted? What standards are you setting up for the criteria which must be applied to the granting of export controls?

You have the votes. What is happening here today is almost nostalgic. From 1935 on I have been standing up here getting hoarse, pounding my head against the stone wall now for 13 years to restore to the American people the rights which are constitutionally theirs, and to prevent legislation which would deny them the freedom for which millions of young Americans have fought, and bled, and died. I am willing to carry on the fight. From the day when you tried to get control of the lifeblood of the American economy in the so-called Banking Act of 1935, we have been fighting and fighting and fighting against the socalizing of any segment of American industry; and, as far as I am concerned, the fight has just begun.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, our admiration on this side for the gentleman from Michigan is so great that no member of the committee enjoys taking issue with him, but his amendment would do great damage to the bill. I think the thing he has in mind is to knock out price criteria.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, I do not, because I have left that in my motion. It is in my motion to substitute.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. That is, everything but price criteria?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have adopted all of those except price criteria and continue existing law.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am glad to have that clarification, of course, but the gentleman will recall that in the debate last year it was made very clear that price criteria is a proper element to be considered along with other considerations. The thing I want to point out is that to adopt the language proposed by the gentleman from Michigan is to also knock out other criteria, such as the end use of the exportable commodity, the country of destination, and matters of that kind. These two criteria are just as important as price, therefore it would be fatal in many respects for his language to be adopted.

The fact of the matter is that we continue in an emergency. The gentleman from Michigan speaks as if we are adopting a permanent policy of export controls. It is sometimes said on the floor in opposition to such controls that in peacetime controls such as this should not be exerted; in other words, drawing a sharp line between war and peace, when, actually, it is not a matter of war and peace so much as a question of normalcy and emergency. Sometimes in a peace period there are emergencies which require just as drastic controls as in a war period and it is because we are determined to protect this Nation's safety that we are willing to adopt controls of this kind.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. I concur in what my distinguished colleague from Arkansas has said. Further, may I point out that this same paragraph that the gentleman from Michigan is seeking to amend provides for representative trade consultation.

In considering exports and the licensing of scarce materials you find many varying degrees and problems in each different line. If we were to limit the bill as his amendment would do only to those criteria which are spelled out definitely in the bill, then we would absolutely vacate and have for no purpose these trade consultations for which the bill provides.

Industrial help and suggestions in the proper methods and procedures for allocation of export licenses will help to prevent disastrous effects on varying lines of trade. The amendment would seriously limit any effective use of other proper criteria so suggested.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Can they do it now? Can they vitiate the criteria that the gentleman from Oklahoma speaks of now? Can they do it at this time? Of course, they can; therefore this language is not necessary unless they expect to expand it. Those are not standards they are talking about and to which the gentleman from Oklahoma referred. If anything, it is in the law now. They are using the law now in that respect and they can use it in that respect without this language.

Mr. MONRONEY. The gentleman overlooks the fact that this is an entirely rewritten law and we are trying to make it workable and make it say what we mean and provide for criteria such as these various trade organizations suggest.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. And the adoption of the gentleman's amendment would put a cloud over the exercise of those criteria.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. To demonstrate the necessity for the end-use provision that the gentleman mentioned, may I refer to cotton, which was referred to a while ago. It would be possible to export cotton for the purposes mentioned by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI], but unless you have the end-use provision there they could make gunpowder out of that cotton instead of using it for making overalls.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. A perfect illustration of the point that you need a combination of criteria at times. Cotton can be put to legitimate uses; it can also be used for the manufacture of things that conflict with our security policy.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. It says that there may be applied "such other standards"—in other words, any other standard. That is what we object to. Why do we not limit it to the standards we are talking abount; for instance, end use?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. For the reason that we must in the final analysis leave the determination of specific export requests to an administrative agency. We must leave as broad discretion as possible.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. In other words, the gentleman wants to leave it as broad as possible, but we want to restrict it.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. We must have powers that are not too broad, but not too limited, as I fear the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan would give us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, just to show how broad the powers are that the Department now possesses, I want to bring to your attention one little incident. I could mention many more, but I do want to bring this one out because it illustrates positively just how great are the powers of the controlling body now on commerce and trade. They not only control exports to the greatest extent but they also control imports to an unreasonable extent.

There was a firm in Michigan last year which had purchased some obsolete rifles in England. These rifles had been sold by the British Government to some private company in England. They were war surplus, in other words. They were rifles used in the First World War. Now, this firm developed the idea whereby they could use these old rifles, rebore them, and put another sight on them and make some other improvements on this old rifle, and it could be used as a hunting rifle, such as a deer rifle, for instance. It was a splendid idea. They applied for an import license. They located a bunch of these rifles and had made a contract, and the rifles were to be shipped here. All of a sudden the import license was canceled. The firm wrote to me and asked me to intercede and find out what happened to their import license. So I went down to the Department. They said, "Well, somebody in the War Department has told us that there may be some need for these rifles, and therefore we had to cancel this import license for this firm." Lo and behold, about 4 months later I got a half page ad out of a Detroit paper that was sent to me by this same firm advertising these same rifles as deer rifles, and who do you think had the rifles? Who got them? Sears, Roebuck & Co. Well, the Michigan firm was doggone sore. They had a right to be angry.

Now, some of these manipulations are not just right. These controls just have not been exercised properly. There are so many selfish people in the world, and we have a few of them in this country, who are using these controls to their own particular advantage in order to make a profit for themselves. There is always the suspicion that by making combinations with certain people in our Government they are able to obtain export and import licenses to do business and make money at the expense of other firms. This way of doing business is not the American way, and sooner or later we are going to cut out this foolishness, and we might as well start doing it right now. It was all right to have controls during the war, when we needed it, but when we carry controls on through in peacetime and it affects legitimate business to a point where it becomes repugnant, I say it should be stopped.

I am a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I sat on that committee during long hearings last year, and we heard a great deal of testimony from business people all over the United States on exports and imports, and we have seen how these controls have worked. They have not worked right. Always came that question of somebody making a great deal of money at the expense of other people. The sooner we get rid of these controls the better off the business of the Nation will be.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 62, noes 96.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of clarification, I should like to inquire about the provisions of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] with respect to rice. Rice is a commodity that was formerly controlled under the provisions of existing law. If I may, I will direct my interrogation to the gentleman from Georgia, a member of the committee, sponsor of the amendment, with respect to the question I had in mind. It is not clear just what this amendment that was adopted, sponsored by the gentleman from Georgia, does with respect to rice. I should like to confirm from the sponsor of the amendment, or from some member of the committee, that rice is included under the provisions of the Brown amendment, and therefore will be decontrolled.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Rice is an agricultural product. It will have the same status as other agricultural commodities. The amendment refers to agricultural commodities and includes fats and oils.

Mr. LARCADE. The gentleman takes the position that in addition to the authority given under the terms of the act for the decontrol of any commodity this specifically takes rice out of the bill, and rice is decontrolled?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I repeat that rice is treated like any other agricultural commodity under my amendment.

Mr. LARCADE. I am trying to get a definite statement from the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I think that is a definite statement.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARCADE. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. There is an international agreement on rice, is there not? How would this affect, if at all, the international agreement?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The amendment is subject to subsections (b) and (c) of section 2 of the bill, but rice still is treated like any other agricultural commodity.

Mr. HARRIS. I agree with the gentleman in his interpretation. I think he is absolutely correct. But we should not overlook the fact that it is subject to the international agreement, in which the Department of Agriculture participated, and, of course, it has the authority to make this determination.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The amendment speaks for itself just as plainly as it can. It is subject to subsections (b) and (c) of section 2.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARCADE. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. WILLIS. Answering the inquiry of the gentleman, I call his attention to the language of the amendment, which, after the decontrolling language, provides "except to the extent required to effectuate the policy stated in clauses (b) and (c) of section 2." Those clauses have to do with foreign policy and national security. Therefore, whereas rice, which I understand to be in surplus, would be decontrolled, it would not be so far as national security and foreign policy are concerned. That is my understanding of the amendment. If the gentleman from Georgia disagrees, I should like him so to state.

Mr. LARCADE. I think this clears the matter up.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I think you have the same protection as the others, and I am sure you would not want any more.

Mr. LARCADE. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE] has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time merely to ask a question with respect to the provision of section 3 of this bill. I regret I was not able to be here during all of the debate, due to hearings of the Committee on Appropriations. But I would like to know the meaning of the language in section 3 with respect to the effectuation of policies which reads:

> To the extent necessary to achieve effective enforcement of this act such rules and regulations may apply to the financing, transporting, and other servicing of exports and the participation therein by any person.

For a number of years my attention has been called by people in the export field in my congressional district who have found difficulty in competition with exporters from foreign governments because of their inability to convert exchange in competition with such foreign governments because in the case of some governments they have accepted their exports by agreeing to convert into the currency or exchange of the exporter's country the currency of the country to which the exports are sent. A concern selling motors, for example, to the European Mediterrean area, for example, is to be paid in pounds sterling within the sterling area. That is all right for the British manufacturer selling motors in that area, but the motor manufacturer in America in my district has opportunities also to sell motors, but he finds he cannot sell in competition with the British manufacturer of motors due to the inability to make the conversion or exchange from pounds sterling into dollars.

In other cases it is found that the exporting country assists the exporter by converting and making good the trade accounts accepted by the exporter in doing business with foreign countries, thus giving a further advantage to the foreign exporter as against the American exporter. I wonder whether or not under the broad language contained in this authority a regulation could be issued by the President that would authorize the export-import bank, or some other department of Federal finance, to discount bills of lading to provide for the exchange of currency to provide dollars for the American exporter?

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I will try to answer his question.

Mr. KEEFE. I shall be very happy to yield. I am seeking information.

Mr. MULTER. I am certain that the rules and regulations that are intended to be promulgated under this section, and which will be promulgated under this section, will lead to the stopping of the kind of complaints that you and I and others have been getting, so that there can be no unfair advantage taken over our merchants because of exchange or by reason of any of the other manipulations that are presently resorted to by some unscrupulous exporters. It is necessary to have permission to make regulations with reference to financing and transporting and servicing only to enforce the act, so that if you call the banks and ask them to reveal to the department what is the story about their exchange, is it going to be against our own merchants, or is it a fair way of exporting these items? They cannot hide behind the foreign exchange, or they cannot send out a declaration which calls for one thing and ship something else.

Mr. KEEFE. I understand that, but that does not answer the question that I have in mind. For example, suppose a British exporter ships manufactured products to an importer in the Mediterranean area, which is a sterling area——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for four additional minutes, in order to get an answer to this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. That British exporter is doing business with a concern in one of the Mediterranean areas. In certain countries—I do not know whether it is actually true in Britain or not, but in some countries the nation itself, in order to stimulate exports of its own citizens, will guarantee, under certain circumstances, to that exporter that he is going to be paid for the material that he ships; whereas the American exporter, who is going directly into that country, has to carry that account, and due to the operation of exchange problems his funds are actually tied up and he does not get payment for his goods. Payment being guaranteed by the government of the foreign country puts that exporter in that country in a very favorable competitive position. Now it has long been suggested that some agency of government should be set up that could provide dollars to the American exporter and assure him that he is in a competitive position with those foreign countries. I simply want to know, as a matter of information in order that I can intelligently appraise this section, whether it is possible to set up such an arrangement by Government action that would assist the American exporter in promoting his business.

Mr. MULTER. It is not the intent of this bill to regulate finances. This is merely to regulate the enforcement features of the Control Act; not to interfere in any way with the banking situation. That must be a matter of other legislation.

Mr. KEEFE. Then, I think the answer is clear, and I am asking this so that the discussion on the floor, in the interpretation of that clause may be made known, a mere reading of the act itself without the explanation, would not seem to delimit it in the manner in which the gentleman has stated; but I gather from the statement of the gentleman from Michigan, in his opening statement, and on other statements which I have heard, that it is the pure intent and purpose of that language in the bill to enable inquiries into financing in order to carry out the enforcement provisions that are contained in the bill, and to enable the Government agency in charge to police the export trade. Is that right?

Mr. MULTER. The reports of the committees of both Houses so indicate. These are enforcement provisions.

Mr. KEEFE. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

VIOLATIONS

SEC. 5. In case of the violation of any provision of this act or any regulation, order, or license issued hereunder, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 6. (a) To the extent necessary or appropriate to the enforcement of this act, the head of any department or agency exercising any functions hereunder (and officers or employees of such department or agency specifically designated by the head thereof) may make such investigations and obtain such information from, require such reports or the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises, or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person. In addition, such officers or employees may administer oaths or affirmations, and may by subpena require any person to appear and testify or to appear and produce books, records, and other writings, or both, and in case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena issued to, any such person, the district court for any district in which such person is found or resides or transacts business, upon application, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony or to appear and produce books, records, and other writings, or both, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirements under this section because of his privilege against self-incrimination, but the immunity provisions of the Compulsory Testimony Act of February 11, 1893 (27 Stat. 443), shall apply with respect to any individual who specifically claims such privilege.

(c) No department, or agency, exercising any functions under this act shall publish or disclose information obtained hereunder which is deemed confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information unless the head of such department or agency determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the national interest.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 4, line 19, after the word "court" insert "of the United States."

Page 5, line 7, strike out the word "or" and after "agency," insert "or official."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 4, line 13, after the word "person" strike out the period and insert the words "applying for an export license."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, as presently worded, the language of section 6 (a) is altogether too broad and far-reaching. It reads:

To the extent necessary or appropriate to the enforcement of this act, the head of any department or agency exercising any functions hereunder (and officers or employees of such department or agency specifically designated by the head thereof) may make such investigations and obtain such information from, require such reports or the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises, or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person.

Any person! Any person!

I do not know of any law that has been enacted that is so far-reaching in respect to investigations, reports, and statements incident to its enforcement, there may have been, but I do not think so. I am merely going to propound the inquiry and let it go at that: Do you want to put every citizen of the United States in a position where notwithstanding the fact that he has not made application for an export license he may be subjected to the pains and penalties of this act? Are you going to give any department or agency the authority, on the pretense that it has something to do with exports, to go into any business house, any bank, or onto any farm, or into any factory, examine the premises, examine the records, without any more restraint than the finding on the part of the head that it might be necessary in the interests of enforcing the provisions of this act? It is, of course, fundamental. If you were voting to protect and defend the constitutional rights of the American people against unreasonable searches and seizures; if you were not voting to deny them certain freedoms which in spirit at least are guaranteed by the American Constitution, you would never vote such language as that into any law. All I am asking you to do by this amendment is to at least restrict the language in the application to persons who are applying for an export license, which it seems to me is very, very reasonable.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. Chairman, this language on page 4, line 13, at the end of the sentence, adding the words "applicant applying for an export license" would restrict the enforcement provisions of this act to the extent I do not believe it could be adequately enforced. In other words, it would prohibit the department enforcing this law from going to the banker and getting the information, because he is not the applicant; it would prohibit the department from going to the steamship company transporting the goods because the steamship company would not be an applicant; it would prohibit the department from going to any person and requiring any testimony except from the applicant himself. And then, of course, when the applicant was confronted with the enforcement authorities he would refuse to testify on the constitutional ground that it might incriminate him. There would, therefore, be no enforcement of any kind whatsoever. We either want a law with enforcement teeth in it, or we do not want any law at all.

Under the administration of this law we have a voluntary agreement now for enforcement. If this voluntary agreement continues a large part of this law will be unnecessary, but if it does not continue and if it breaks down, then this is the shotgun in the corner that will compel enforcement of the act. I submit the gentleman's amendment restricts the language to the extent where the law could not be enforced.

This section is vital. It is an enforcement provision. It is not in existing law. If the amendment is adopted this will cripple the whole bill and put it back to where the existing law is now, which is entirely too weak at the present time.

One of the greatest evils we have had in this country in recent years has been the black market—people who would buy goods and commodities at the fixed price, then go into the black market and sell them at a much higher price, sometimes several times as much. We will have the same kind of black market probably in this export business if it is not Government supervised and if we do not carefully protect against it in the law. I know that is not intended by the gentleman from Michigan because he does not want to help any black marketeer, but at the same time it will weaken the law to the extent that the black market will be aided and encouraged and will tend to break down entirely the enforcement of the act.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment is defeated.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. I am amazed in looking over the enforcement provisions of this bill to know how far they go. Of course, I can see a general pattern in what the administration wants to do. The administration that has been in power for some 20 years has been enlarging its activities and becoming larger and larger and getting more and more control over the freedoms of the American people. I say to you gentlemen on my right that when the Government becomes so large, larger year by year through the development of bureaus and governmental powers, then you and I and the folks back home will become smaller and smaller. This bill infringes on the rights and liberties of the American people. I question its constitutionality. It goes much further than any Congress adopted during the war.

We are giving entirely too much power to a Government agency, and I think it will amount to sending out a horde of bureaucrats and snoopers over the land to pry into the affairs of the American people. It is a mistake you are making in this bill to vote such wide powers to any agency of government. I do not think the gentleman from Michigan and the Republicans on the left side of the aisle are going to get very far. You are bumping your heads against a stone wall, because orders have apparently come down from on high to increase the powers of the Federal agencies.

In the Byrd report you read that the number of new Federal employees have increased 289 every day this last year. Why, 20 years ago when you came into power there were about 570,000 Federal employees. Today there are over 2,000,000. At that time it cost less than $4,000,000,000 to run the Government of the United States, and today you are asking for a budget of about $42,000,000,000. You had at that time about 350 Federal agencies. Today there are 1,833 Federal agencies, and growing all the time.

I am saying to you who are supporting this administration bill for a larger and bigger and stronger Federal Government, that it will take from you and those you represent many liberties and rights that should be theirs. My position is that the Federal Government should merely be an umpire, guaranteeing fair play. The rewards or failures should go to the individual. The Government is becoming too powerful, all too powerful at this time. Bills are coming to this Congress for a cradle to the grave security. Bills that give the Federal Government more and more power. I say to you my colleagues that the best government is that which is kept close to home and governs less. I say to you it is time to call a halt on big government, big business, and the authority of government to control the lives of all of us. If we do not we drift to a socialism in which the individual loses both freedom and security.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 53, noes 93.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS of Florida: Page 4, line 23, after the comma following the word "both", strike out the balance of section 6 (a) and insert "after a hearing in which the judge of said district court determines that the books, records, and other writings are material and pertinent to such investigation, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof."

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, my amendment does only this: It provides that before a contempt order can be issued against any person upon the complaint of the party who is investigating the exports a hearing must be had. Let me give you my interpretation of the bill, and if I am wrong I ask the gentleman from Texas to correct me.

Under the bill, if the investigator approaches any person and says, "I want your books, I want your records, I want every writing you have," and the man says, "It is not pertinent, it is not material, and I do not want you to have it," then the investigator can issue a subpena to him and if he does not comply with the subpena, then, upon the investigator's merely making application to the Federal court, without any hearing, without determining whether or not there is any merit to his contention, or without determining whether the books or writings are material or pertinent, the man can be held in contempt of court.

I think it should not be permitted that a bureaucratic agency of this Government can go into a man's business and, relying solely on its own discretion, take that man before a judge and say, "I need the books," and get an order against him without even a hearing. That is not American.

Let us see what the language is in the bill:

In addition, such officers or employees may administer oaths or affirmations, and may by subpena require any person to appear and testify or to appear and produce books, records, and other writings, or both, and in case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena issued to, any such person, the district court of the United States for any district in which such person is found or resides or transacts business, upon application, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony or to appear and produce books, records, and other writings, or both, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

My amendment adds "after a hearing in which the judge of said district court determines that the books and records and other writings are material and pertinent to such investigation."

When the court determines that, then they ought to be produced, but a contempt order ought never be issued against the man if the books for which the investigator calls are not pertinent and material. I think the Congress ought to protect the American people, to some extent, at least, from such proceedings and actions as this. But how much more time would it take for this agency to go to a judge, after making the application, and show that the books were material and pertinent? Certainly the man who is being investigated ought to have some hearing before he is held in contempt of court.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. The provision in this bill requires that in the event a person refuses to obey a subpena the agent must go before a court. That is the provision the gentleman is attempting to amend. Can we not leave it to a United States district judge to determine whether or not this man complained against should have a minute's hearing or an hour's hearing or 2 weeks' hearing? It is up to the judge.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS] has expired.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas this question. Is it the purpose of this committee in reporting this bill to say that before an order of contempt is issued, that the party against whom the contempt is issued shall have a hearing as to the materiality?

Mr. PATMAN. It says so in the language of the bill. It says they must appear before a United States court, and that carries with it the authority and jurisdiction of the judge to determine for himself whether he will have a hearing or not.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Then why is there any objection to putting this language in the bill if that is the intention of the committee?

You know that any judge, though he be inexperienced, can interpret it that way.

Mr. PATMAN. I believe we must assume that a United States district judge will act as he should act. Why should we help a man who wants to use the district judge just for delaying purposes? You would require it in every case, and every case will not need that.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. But you only say "upon application." You do not say "a hearing shall be had." If you put the notice hearing in, then I say it is all right. But let us not give these people that power. You know how some of them act.

Mr. PATMAN. This is only a temporary law.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I do not care how temporary it is. We have no right to barter away the right of the American people to be heard before a contempt order is issued against them.

Mr. PATMAN. As the gentleman from Georgia pointed out, you will harm the people that we are attempting to help.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I do not think that I am harming a person if I ask that he be given a hearing before a contempt order is issued against him. I do not think that is harming anyone. I hope the Congress will afford Americans an opportunity to be heard before a contempt order is issued against them.

You know how some of these bureaucratic inspectors go out and gather up these records in evidence and then they act as prosecutor and judge and in every other capacity possible. I think you have to give the American people some rights. This is not an amendment which is contrary to the purposes of the bill. I hope the Congress will adopt this amendment so that we know it is spelled out in black and white and we will know that before a contempt order can be issued, that the man has had a hearing. That is all I want.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. You want a hearing provided for here, otherwise a bureaucrat will go to a man and read these five lines to him and will say to him, "You do not get a hearing, and you had better behave yourself and produce your books."

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. That is possible.

Mr. CHURCH. That bureaucrat will say to him, "You do not get a hearing, sir, and you had better behave."

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I think that is possible.

Mr. CHURCH. That is the bureaucratic way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS] has expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, those of us who are supporting this amendment fear that this section seeks to punish contempt of a bureaucrat rather than contempt of court. If there is no hearing, no appearance of the citizen whose books or records are to be examined and produced under compulsion, then how can the judge constitutionally exercise the power to punish for contempt when there is no contempt other than contempt of the bureaucrat who issues the subpena for the books to be produced? It seems to me that the gentleman's amendment particularly, since he says that to write in the word "hearing" is all he wants, is a most reasonable amendment, and necessary to give the section validity. I hope the committee will accept it. Why? The committee should welcome any improving amendment. If you mean what this section says, any district court of the United States "for any district in which such person is found," "upon application"—though by whom is not stated—"shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and produce books, records, and other writings," although the case in which the bureaucrat's subpena was issued is pending 3,000 miles away, and the subpena never was served on anyone, and the man "found" in the new State never heard of the case, without specifying what books, records, or other writings, nor whose, nor where. And any failure to obey such order—even if the man "found" never saw it, never was in that court, or knew any such order had been issued, nevertheless, the man could be punished "by such court as a contempt thereof."

Mr. PATMAN. According to Federal Court Rules of Procedure, could not a litigant get that same relief right now? In other words, if he asked for a hearing under Federal procedure, would not the court give him a hearing?

Mr. HOBBS. Not at all. Under this law, as it reads, and if it means what you contend it means, then there can be no harm done by the pending amendment.

Mr. PATMAN. No harm done?

Mr. HOBBS. Not a bit.

Mr. PATMAN. Except that it will just delay the procedure, and that is what most people have objected to.

They do not want any delay in procedure. They want action such as on fats and oils.

The only criticism we have had against the Department was delay in decontrolling fats and oils. If you adopt this amendment it will be delayed longer and longer, whereas, under existing law, it will be up to the judge, and if he believes they are just using him, he can just say, "It is obvious. I am not going to be a party to this black-marketing. I am going to make these fellows bring these books and records in." Otherwise they could have a delaying action, like they have right now in New York, and perishable products would be destroyed.

Mr. HOBBS. I appreciate the explanation of the gentleman, but to my mind it is simply a misconception of the fact. I have seen 18 contempt cases tried in an hour. There is no delay. All that this amendment asks for is that before you send an American citizen to jail for contempt, you give him notice and a hearing on the merits, whereas your law says that a bureaucrat can insist upon the production of books, or records, or other writings, whether they belong to the man in the toils of the bureaucrat, or not, and if the man fails to obey the bureaucrat he goes to jail for contempt, not of the bureaucrat, but of court, without knowledge, notice, or hearing.

Mr. PATMAN. No. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. HOBBS. Then, if we are mistaken, why does the committee object to inserting those words?

Mr. PATMAN. It says, "when the Department calls upon him to produce information and he refuses," then the Department head must go to the court himself and get an order from the United States District Court himself to produce these books and papers. Then, and then only, can he be cited for contempt. The gentleman evidently has not read this language.

Mr. HOBBS. I beg your pardon. I have read it and I have read it very carefully. You do not provide for any hearing as to the contempt of the bureaucrat or of any court. It is made obligatory upon the court to issue an order without notice or hearing—right or wrong—when there has been no contempt, nor even opportunity for contempt, the victim "may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof."

Mr. SPENCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. SPENCE. The citizen has his rights under the law, and stating it in this act would not have any effect. A court certainly would not send a man to jail without a hearing.

Mr. HOBBS. Your bill says that he could do so, sir.

Mr. SPENCE. If it does that it would be clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. HOBBS. I think so too, and that is the reason I am supporting this amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. There is no intention of that kind in the act. A judge would not send a man to jail for contempt of some other administrative agency. The judge would only send a man to jail for contempt of court. The judge could not try that.

Mr. HOBBS. That is exactly the position that I am taking here.

Mr. SPENCE. That is the position I take, and it is not in this bill.

Mr. HOBBS. It is to save your bill from unconstitutionality that we are supporting this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOBBS], has expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I desire to point out on page 4, commencing with line 14, the officers are employees of the department enforcing this act, and they would have a right to subpena any person to appear and testify and bring books. Then if he refuses, if the party refuses, then and only then, commencing in line 17 and in line 18, will the department through its officers and agents go into the United States District Court in the district where the person resides, into his home district where he resides, and upon application the judge is not required to do anything. But the judge shall have jurisdiction to issue an order, and we must assume that a United States district judge is going to know what he is doing before he issues any such order; then, if the judge issues the order and the party who resides in the United States district represented by the court refuses to obey the judge, he can be cited for contempt. Is not that the way of enforcing law in the United States? It is the way that ordinary laws are enforced. Why should we make an exception?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. We all know that if an applicant said he was being abused by the agency that the United States district judge—imagine that—the district judge—in fact there is no doubt in my mind that he would take that into consideration.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Would the gentleman object adding the phrase "after application and hearing"?

Mr. PATMAN. The language of this bill has been carefully considered. Now the gentleman wants to come in here and without consideration add different language to that which has been so carefully written. That is possibly throwing a monkey wrench into the machinery.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. HOBBS. Why, if the gentleman in his own words says that "we must assume" does he, then, object to inserting the assumption?

Mr. PATMAN. Because the judge might know they are just using him for a delaying action and he would not want to be used; therefore he would say "no hearing is necessary in this case"; so we leave it to the United States district judge.

Mr. HOBBS. That is exactly the purpose of the amendment, to leave it up to the judge.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEEFE. Has the time on this amendment been limited?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has not been limited.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the Members should read this section very, very carefully. There are a great many lawyers in this House who have had experience in court. What happens under this language ought to be clear to every lawyer in Congress: First, the person whose books and records are sought by an administrative agent of the Government refuses to produce those books at the request of the administrative agent; that agent then goes to a United States district judge and in an ex parte proceeding when the person involved is not present asks that judge for an ex parte order compelling the citizen to produce those books. There is not a lawyer in this Congress who has ever had experience who does not know that such orders are usually signed not only by United States district judges but also by other judges as a pure perfunctory matter. He issues the order in accordance with the language of this legislation directing this citizen to produce those books. Listen to what it states. It states that he "may issue that order upon application."

Not after hearing of the citizen but upon mere application of the administrative officer. After that order has been issued and the citizen still refuses to produce the books and records it states:

> Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

After he fails to comply with the ex parte order issued by the court in which he has had no opportunity to be heard, the court may issue a contempt citation and bring him before the court for contempt of the court, and punish him as the law prescribes.

At no place in that procedure is there any opportunity for the citizen to be heard except at the whim or caprice of the Federal judge who may or may not say: "Sir, I am going to let you give an explanation to me before I send you to jail for your contempt of this court." He clearly is in contempt under this law if he fails to comply with the order of the judge that has been issued ex parte.

It would seem to me it is asking only very little to say to the citizen under those circumstances, "You shall be entitled to a hearing before an adjudication of contempt is entered and before punishment is inflicted."

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Is it not reasonable to assume, in fact, that the Federal judge would accord the citizen an opportunity to explain why he had in the first instance failed to comply with the order of the administrator?

Mr. KEEFE. My dear sir, I would say I have such a deep and abiding respect for the Federal judiciary as such generally and for the judiciary as such generally, I would think most judges would take that position; however, the situation is well known of flagrant abuses of rights by Federal judges and other judges in matters of this character When he has once issued his order directing the production of those books as an ex parte matter in which the citizen has not been heard, then it would seem to me it is only fair to accept the suggestions of the distinguished gentleman from Florida and the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, who is a very highly respected Member of the House Judiciary Committee, and simply assure the citizen by writing the language in there and giving him assurance which you say we ought to assume so that the citizen will have this protection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee I would like to offer a substitute that on page 4, line 21, after the word "order" there be inserted "after hearing."

Mr. SPENCE. The committee, I am sure, will accept that amendment.

Mr. PATMAN. I will ask the gentleman to withdraw his amendment, with the understanding that the committee will offer an amendment, after the word "order" in line 21, page 4, to read "shall have jurisdiction to issue an order after hearing." In other words, put in the words "after hearing" requiring such person to appear.

Mr. PHILBIN. He could be heard before a member of the district attorney's office. I would suggest "after hearing and notice to the aggrieved party."

Mr. PATMAN. On application after hearing?

Mr. PHILBIN. Hearing and notice to the aggrieved party.

Mr. KEEFE. Surely what the gentleman is seeking to accomplish, as I understand, by his amendment, is to provide for a hearing.

Mr. PATMAN. Before the judge.

Mr. KEEFE. Before the judge?

Mr. PATMAN. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. At which the aggrieved party or the citizen may have notice of the hearing and the right to appear and be heard. If you simply insert, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the words "after hearing" that could be accomplished by merely having the administrative officer come before the judge. That would be a hearing. We want to assure the citizen the right to a hearing.

Mr. PATMAN. The Committee has gotten along so well today, and we want to try to satisfy the people that do not understand what we are trying to do in this provision, and if we can do it by a simple amendment, we would like to do it. I have no objection to putting that in, if it is all right with the chairman, "after notice and hearing."

Mr. SPENCE. We will accept that.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. What is the purport of the gentleman's amendment at the present time?

Mr. PATMAN. The judge can issue this order only after notice and hearing to the aggrieved person.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Would the gentleman mind putting in there, "after notice to the aggrieved party"?

Mr. PATMAN. That is all right.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. All right, I will accept that.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, it may be involved in that respect. We will not do that.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. The amendment offered by the gentleman recognizes the fact that the rights of a citizen should not necessarily rest upon an assumption, no matter how reasonable it might be. I think the amendment that the gentleman has offered meets the objection raised to the original language.

Mr. PATMAN. I offer the amendment which reads, "after notice and hearing."

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Why do you not say, "after notice of hearing to any such person"?

Mr. PATMAN. Well, that would be a little involved there.

Mr. COOLEY. In line 18 you use the language "any such person."

Mr. PATMAN. That is right.

Mr. COOLEY. Then why not put in "after notice of hearing"?

Mr. PATMAN. Does the gentleman mean after the word "application" on line 21, "after notice and hearing to any such person"?

Mr. COOLEY. That is right.

Mr. PATMAN. Now I ask that the amendment be voted on, with the assumption that the gentleman of Florida will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Will the gentleman repeat his amendment?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes. After the word "application", in line 21 insert "after notice to any such person and hearing."

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 4, line 21, after the word "application", insert "after notice to any such person and hearing."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. You surely have got this thing all mixed up now.

Mr. PATMAN. Of course, we want a comma there.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Who do you give it to?

Mr. PATMAN. We can change the punctuation, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not see how you can change the punctuation and make sense out of it.

Mr. PATMAN. I think it makes sense, and others think so.

Mr. WOLCOTT. "Application after notice." Notice to whom, for whom, for what?

Mr. PATMAN. "Application, after notice to any such person and hearing shall have jurisdiction to issue an order." The judge shall have jurisdiction.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, could we correct it if we put the word "and" in?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of course, you could correct it by recommtting it to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. PATMAN. We have three other bills yet, and if we agree on this, we will get through and adjourn until Monday. If we do not get through here now, we will have to come back tomorrow, and in the interest of trying to get through, I suggest that we adopt this amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I suggest that after the word "application" you insert "and", making it read "and after notice to any such person and hearing." The word "and" would take care of it, I think.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment that after the comma in line 21 there be inserted these words: "and after notice to any such person and hearing."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: On page 4, line 21, after the comma insert "and after notice to any such person and hearing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 5, line 11, after "information" insert a period, and strike out all of lines 12, 13, and 14.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think this has been covered in the general debate. It is very obvious that the person disclosing the information would have no protection whatsoever in respect to confidential treatment of that information except as the head of the department or the official might determine that it was confidential. It is very apparent from the language that whether or not the information is deemed confidential and whether or not it is treated as confidential is wholly within the discretion of the department or official administering the law.

I do think we should be just a little bit careful. This has never been done before. There are four or five precedents in this bill in respect to the delegation of very unusual powers and the denial to individuals of liberties which heretofore seemingly have been guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. If you do not delete this language, it will probably establish a precedent which might come back to bother you for a long time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious at this stage of the game that the devious purpose is to compound confusion here by attempting to quibble about phrases and to delete proposals in the bill, which have been carefully discussed in committee. This amendment would insert a period at the end of line 11 on page 5 and strike out qualifying language which reads "unless the head of such department or agency determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the national interest."

I believe that that language should stay in because it qualifies the statement and clarifies it. The experience of the Department in carrying out the provisions of the Export Control Act since its enactment in 1940 and its continuance in 1947 indicates that language of this character is essential.

I do not think that we should concern ourselves too much about a phrase of this sort. I ask that this amendment be voted down and that the language be permitted to remain as is.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I want to compliment the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] for the remarks he made on this same bill in a speech on December 15, 1947, when he so eloquently said, and I now want to read what he said:

We have likewise exended export controls in such manner that the President may be given broad authority, broad discretion as to this second reason why we have high prices and inflation. This second reason is the unusually heavy demand of foreign countries for American goods which are in short supply. The President is authorized under this bill so to adjust our exports as to safeguard and stabilize the American economy. We have given the power in this bill to start the job which has got to be done if we are going to have economic stability and lower prices in the United States.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution in referring to the remarks of the then chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in December 1947 when an extension of this particular section of Public Law 395 involving export controls was up for consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that this section remain as is and ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT.]

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 85, noes 101.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXEMPTION FROM ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT

SEC. 7. The functions exercised under this act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237), except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ELLSWORTH: page 5, line 15, strike out all of section 7.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in 1946 we passed an excellent piece of legislation, which has proven its worth time and time again since its enactment. The law to which I refer is known as the Administrative Procedure Act of 1946, which requires administrative agencies to give notice, hold hearings, and give due publication to any rules, orders, or regulations promulgated by such agencies.

I can see no reason why the Congress, after enacting a very fine piece of legislation of that kind, which has proven its worth through years of operation, should today enact a law exempting an agency typical in all respects of the agencies which the Administrative Procedure Act was supposed to cover.

I feel that is particularly strange in view of some of the debate we have heard today. It seems to me there are many features of the bill now before us which take us farther down the road toward government by whim and caprice rather than government by law.

I call attention to the fact that the Administrative Procedure Act would only require the Office of International Trade to hear and take testimony from and consult with the various people with whom they deal, various private individuals in our country. The bill attempts to do that very same thing, and all in the world we would do by eliminating section 7 would be to further clarify the language which appears on page 3 and which authorizes "utilization of private competitive trade channels insofar as practicable, giving consideration to the interests of small business." The Administrative Procedure Act, referred to in section 7, not only gives consideration to business people, small and large, but sets up the procedure as to how that consideration is to be given. I think that is a practical principle that has been written out in the law. It can and should be applied to the Office of International Trade the same as any other agency, so that the small merchant and everybody else can know just how he is going to be treated. Otherwise this bill is a wide-open blank-check authority, of the type which would even make the rubber-stamp days of the New Deal look conservative.

All I suggest is that the section which would exempt the Office of International Trade from the Administrative Procedure Act, be eliminated from the bill, and let the law now on the books apply. That does not in any way hamper or hamstring or cripple or defeat the purposes of this bill. It has nothing to do with the intent of the proposed legislation. It merely replaces the possibility of whim and caprice with orderly procedure, as previously spelled out by this Congress.

I would suggest, although I feel certain I will get little support for the idea, that the Committee give serious consideration to accepting this amendment for the reasons I have stated, and because the Administrative Procedure Act does give the common citizen some needed protection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. The provision suspends certain sections of the Administrative Procedure Act as far as this bill is concerned. All the temporary bills heretofore have had it. The Price Control Act, the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act—all of the temporary legislation has that provision. It is a standard provision in temporary legislation, and it is written into this act.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the Senate report on this bill, on page 6, wherein, in referring to this amendment, it says:

This is in accord with the policy expressed in section 2 of the Administrative Procedure Act itself. Other temporary regulatory activities authorized since that act have been granted comparable exemption. Examples of such are contained in the Sugar Control Exemption, and the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, the Veterans' Emergency Housing Program, and the War Housing Insurance Act.

Mr. SPENCE. Section 3 of the Administrative Procedure Act is applicable to the act, and that requires the publication of all the rules and regulations in the Federal Register.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERLY REPORT

SEC. 8. The head of any department or agency, exercising any functions under this act shall make a quarterly report within 45 days after each quarter to the President and to the Congress of his operations hereunder.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 21, after "agency", insert the words "or official."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEFINITION

SEC. 9. The term "person" as used herein shall include the singular and the plural and any individual, partnership, corporation, or other form of association, including any government or agency thereof.

EFFECT ON OTHER ACTS

SEC. 10. The act of February 15, 1936 (49 Stat. 1140), relating to the licensing of exports of tin-plate scrap, is hereby superseded; but nothing contained in this act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or otherwise affect the provisions of any other laws authorizing control over exports of any commodity.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 11. This act shall take effect February 28, 1949, upon the expiration of section 6 of the act of July 2, 1940 (54 Stat. 714), as amended. All outstanding delegations, regulations, orders, licenses, or other forms of administrative action under said section 6 of the act of July 2, 1940, shall, until amended or revoked, remain in full force and effect, the same as if promulgated under this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 17, before the word "regulations", insert the word "rules."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

TERMINATION DATE

SEC. 12. The authority granted herein shall terminate on June 30, 1951, or upon any prior date which the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 6, line 3, strike out "1951" and insert in lieu thereof "1950."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of discussion this afternoon about the power and the authority which is delegated, and the statement has been made—and I believe it has not been successfully contradicted—that the provisions of this bill can give to the Administrator of the bill control over our domestic economy.

It has been said here also that we should not be apprehensive of the powers of this bill, because it is temporary; that we are continuing it for only a temporary period. On almost all occasions that I can recall, where we were dealing with temporary legislation, 1 year was the longest for which we would grant these powers without review by the Congress. If we do not change this date from June 30, 1951, to June 30, 1950, we will establish as a matter of permanent policy, permanent and effective at least for 2 years, these new and very unusual powers and controls over our economy.

I wish that you would think what you are doing, and determine if you as a matter of congressional policy want to establish these powers permanently, because if they can be justified for the next years they can be justified to continue for 5½ years after the cessation of hostilities, then, of course, they can be justified to run 10, 15, 20, or 50 years after the cessation of hostilities. You are in effect setting up this program as a program of permanent Government policy which I do not think you want to do or intend to do.

At the proper time a motion to recommit will be offered to continue export controls for 1 year as they now exist, which means that all of the powers and authority which the President and the Government have in respect to export controls will be continued for 1 year, including the power and the authority to use price criteria in determining to whom the license shall be granted.

In addition to that, the motion to recommit will include the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to exempt from the operation of the law insofar as specific licenses are concerned agricultural commodities in surplus. So that by adopting the motion to recommit we will continue all of the powers which the Government has had since 1940 to control exports and, in addition, we will protect agriculture from the exercise of these controls in the case of agricultural surpluses.

Let me remind the Members, Mr. Chairman, if we continue this power for 2 years it will take a two-thirds vote of this Congress to ever get the powers back. It will take a two-thirds vote of this Congress to restore to the American people the constitutional rights and freedoms which you are delegating to the administration today under this bill.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact it is not for merely 2 years. It is 2 years and a third of another year.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. Chairman, this apparently is the last of a deluge of amendments that have been attempted to be placed on a bill which I think most of the Members who sat through the hearings regarded as rather noncontroversial.

We have had more bogeymen raised to scare the Congress in connection with a program that has been operating for a great many years, particularly in protecting our national economy and security against the overexport of scarce materials, than I have ever heard raised on the floor of this House.

The pending amendment would seek to reduce the time by 1 year on these export controls which under the bill will go for 28 months.

Mr. Chairman, export controls are a very vital arm of the Marshall plan or the European recovery program. You cannot operate the Marshall plan without export controls. If you want to sabotage the European recovery program which will run for several more years, just extend these controls for 1 year or 16 months, and you will cast a serious doubt on the success of the recovery program.

What has been the record of these export controls? They started out with more than 3,000 items under control. We are down to slightly over 300 at this time. Does that sound like a bureaucracy which is continually grasping and trying to expand its hold on the American economy or destroy the standards of American business or to put the farmers out of business or the little manufacturers out of business? Of course not.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. No. I have not the time.

Mr. TABER. I have a factory that closed up on account of these controls.

Mr. MONRONEY. This agency has attempted to decontrol wherever possible and not extend their coverage and are certainly not expanding their power.

One point has been overlooked in this extension of time. If you extend it only for a short period of time—because these are export controls and the export control business must be done about 6 months in advance of the shipment of these goods; it is not an instantaneous process like local domestic sales—then you are actually going to end this program, in reality, 6 months before the termination date provided for in the act.

Congress can, under this bill, by concurrent resolution—and it is a process that has been put in many bills that have gone through the House—terminate export controls at an earlier date. Now, the law has never been satisfactorily settled whether it requires a Presidential signature or not, but it is the feeling of the members that it does not require a Presidential signature, so the will of a bare majority of this Congress can be respected.

This program has safeguarded the economy of this country, and has stopped the shipment of high-octane gasoline, steel, and other vital war potential supplies to Russia itself.

You relied on this act at that time when you stopped the ships in the California harbors from taking high-octane gasoline to Russia. Without this act, exporters can ship anything excepting actual munitions to any country behind the iron curtain. No screening can be done of these exports—nor no question raised as to their intended use—if this act is killed.

I believe we can extend this act to protect this Nation's safety for 2 years' time, and you will find that with the program under which we are safeguarding American economy and security we will be better off.

I hope the amendment is defeated.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma is about right. There was not much controversy before the committee. But at the same time, Mr. Chairman, we could have used the same law that we had from 1940 up to the present time. Somebody, evidently, wanted a little more power. So, they stuck a few of these little provisions in the bill, and that is why we have been talking all the afternoon. Regardless of what anybody might say, we are giving too much power to the Federal Government. I heard a gentleman here yesterday say what they did for New England, or what would happen if we needed something. Well, let me say for New England, and especially Massachusetts, that if the Federal Government, and the bureaus that are running the Federal Government, will stay out of Massachusetts, we will be just about ten or fifteen times better off.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the exchairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency has made a fair proposition in asking that this only go into effect for a year, or a year and a couple of months, because the Department of Commerce has already decontrolled about 90 percent of the exports that they had when this thing started. So, there are only about 10 percent left. And, if they will let the people of the country produce and keep producing, you will not need that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 97, noes 118.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HUBER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1661) to provide for continuation of authority for the regulation of exports, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 97, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOLCOTT moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment in the nature of a substitute: Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"SECTION 1. (a) Section 6 (d) of the Act of July 2, 1940 (54 Stat. 714), as amended, is amended by striking out 'February 28, 1949' and inserting in lieu thereof 'February 28, 1950'.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President in the exercise of the powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon him by such act of July 2, 1940, as amended, is authorized to use price criteria in the licensing of exports, either by giving preference among otherwise comparable applications to those which provide for the lowest prices, or, in exceptional circumstances, by fixing reasonable mark ups in export prices over domestic prices.

"(c) The authority conferred by this section shall not be exercised with respect to any agricultural commodity, including fats and oils, during any period for which the supply of such commodity is determined by the Secretary of Agriculture to be in excess of the requirements of the domestic economy, except to the extent required to effectuate the policies set forth in clause (b) or clause (c) of section 2 hereof."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. WOLCOTT. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 139, nays 222, not voting 72, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 548) to provide for continuation of authority for the regulation of exports, and for other purposes, a similar bill to the one just passed by the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Export Control Act of 1949."

FINDINGS

(a) Certain materials continue in short supply at home and abroad so that the quantity of United States exports and their distribution among importing countries affect the welfare of the domestic economy and have an important bearing upon the fulfillment of the foreign policy of the United States.

(b) The unrestricted export of materials without regard to their potential military significance may affect the national security.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. The Congress hereby declares that it is the policy of the United States to use export controls to the extent necessary (a) to protect the domestic economy from the excessive drain of scarce materials and to reduce the inflationary impact of abnormal foreign demand; (b) to further the foreign policy of the United States and to aid in fulfilling its international responsibilities; and (c) to exercise the necessary vigilance over exports from the standpoint of their significance to the national security.

AUTHORITY

SEC. 3. (a) To effectuate the policies set forth in section 2 hereof, the President may prohibit or curtail the exportation from the United States, its Territories, and possessions, of any articles, materials, or supplies, including technical data, except under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe. To the extent necessary to achieve effective enforcement of this act, such rules and regulations may apply to the financing, transporting, and other servicing of exports and the participation therein by any person.

(b) The President may delegate the power, authority, and discretion conferred upon him by this act to such departments, agencies, or officials of the Government as he may deem appropriate.

(c) The authority conferred by this section shall not be exercised with respect to any agricultural commodity, including fats and oils, during any period for which the supply of such commodity is determined by the Secretary of Agriculture to be in excess of the requirements of the domestic economy, except to the extent required to effectuate the policies set forth in clause (b) or clause (c) of section 2 hereof.

CONSULTATION AND STANDARDS

SEC. 4. (a) In determining which articles, materials, or supplies shall be controlled hereunder, and in determining the extent to which exports thereof shall be limited, any department, agency, or official making these determinations shall seek information and advice from the several executive departments and independent agencies concerned with aspects of our domestic and foreign policies and operations having an important bearing on exports.

(b) In authorizing exports, full utilization of private competitive trade channels shall be encouraged insofar as practicable, giving consideration to the interests of small business, merchant exporters as well as producers, and established and new exporters, and provisions shall be made for representative trade consultation to that end. In addition, there may be applied such other standards or criteria as may be deemed necessary by the head of such department or agency, or official to carry out the policies of this act.

VIOLATIONS

SEC. 5. In case of the violation of any provision of this act or any regulation, order, or license issued hereunder, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 6. (a) To the extent necessary or appropriate to the enforcement of this act, the head of any department or agency exercising any functions hereunder (and officers or employees of such department or agency specifically designated by the head thereof) may make such investigations and obtain such information from, require such reports or the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises, or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person. In addition, such officers or employees may administer oaths or affirmations, and may by subpena require any person to appear and testify or to appear and produce books, records, and other writings, or both, and in case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena issued to, any such person, the district court of the United States for any district in which such person is found or resides in or transacts business, upon application, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony or to appear and produce books, records, and other writings, or both, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirements under this section because of his privilege against self-incrimination, but the immunity provisions of the Compulsory Testimony Act of February 11, 1893 (27 Stat. 443), shall apply with respect to any individual who specifically claims such privilege.

(c) No department, agency, or official exercising any functions under this act shall publish or disclose information obtained hereunder which is deemed confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information unless the head of such department or agency determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the national interest.

EXEMPTION FROM ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT

SEC. 7. The functions exercised under this act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237), except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

QUARTERLY REPORT

SEC. 8. The head of any department or agency, or official exercising any functions under this act shall make a quarterly report, within 45 days after each quarter, to the President and to the Congress of his operations hereunder.

DEFINITION

SEC. 9. The term "person" as used herein shall include the singular and the plural and any individual, partnership, corporation, or other form of association, including any government or agency thereof.

EFFECT ON OTHER ACTS

SEC. 10. The act of February 15, 1936 (49 Stat. 1140), relating to the licensing of exports of tin-plate scrap, is hereby superseded; but nothing contained in this act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or otherwise affect the provisions of any other laws authorizing control over exports of any commodity.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 11. This act shall take effect February 28, 1949, upon the expiration of section 6 of the act of July 2, 1940 (54 Stat. 714), as amended. All outstanding delegations, rules, regulations, orders, licenses, or other forms of administrative action under said section 6 of the act of July 2, 1940, shall, until amended or revoked, remain in full force and effect, the same as if promulgated under this act.

TERMINATION DATE

SEC. 12. The authority granted herein shall terminate on June 30, 1951, or upon any prior date which the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: Page 5, line 6, after the comma insert the following: "and after notice to any such person and hearing."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, this makes the Senate bill identical with the one just passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings by which the bill, H. R. 1661, was passed will be vacated and the bill laid on the table.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 2402. An act to extend the Office of the War Assets Administrator and the War Assets Administration from February 28, 1949, until June 30, 1949.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 51. Joint resolution to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to sell, charter, and operate vessels, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Vice President has appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the joint select committe on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

1. Department of the Army.
2. Department of the Air Force.
3. Departments of the Army and the Air Force.
4. Department of Commerce.
5. Department of the Interior.
6. Department of State.
7. Department of the Treasury.
8. Civil Service Commission.
9. Federal Security Agency.
10. National Archives.
11. Tennessee Valley Authority.
12. Veterans' Administration.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 66 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands (now comprised of the six former Committees on Insular Affairs, Territories, Public Lands, Irrigation and Reclamation, Mines and Mining, and Indian Affairs) may make investigations into any matter within its jurisdiction. For the purpose of making such investigations the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within or outside the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARITIME COMMISSION

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 92) to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to sell, charter, and operate vessels, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would like to have the gentleman explain very briefly the resolution he has offered.

Mr. BLAND. The resolution carries into effect the right to charter and operate vessels until June 30, 1949. It was agreed to by all of the members of the committee.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to say that the minority have directed me to say that they are in wholehearted accord with the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee on this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, is it the purpose of the gentleman to bring in new legislation before the 4 months expire, or does he think this will wind it up?

Mr. BLAND. We are considering a bill now, but we thought it needed to be considered a little further in the light of changing conditions.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not think then that we could wind this operation up in 4 months?

Mr. BLAND. No, not now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to continue until March 1, 1949, the authority of the Maritime Commission to sell, charter, and operate vessels, and for other purposes", approved February 27, 1948 (Public Law 423, Eightieth Congress), is amended by striking out the date "March 1, 1949" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof the date "March 1, 1950." That joint resolution is further amended by inserting at the end of subparagraph (b) thereof the words ": Provided, however, That vessels may be chartered to the Republic of the Philippines, or citizens thereof, for use in the interisland commerce of the Philippines in accordance with section 306 of the Philippine Rehabilitation Act of April 30, 1946 (60 Stat. 137; U. S. C., 1946 ed., title 50, sec. 1786)."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "March 1, 1950" and insert "June 30, 1949."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

House Resolution 102 was laid on the table.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, Congress enacted the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948, which contained in section 111 (a) a provision that—

The Administrator shall, in providing for the procurement of commodities under authority of this title, take such steps as may be necessary to assure, so far as practicable, that, at least 50 percent of the gross tonnage of commodities procured within the United States out of funds made available under this title and transported abroad on ocean vessels is so transported on United States flag vessels to the extent such vessels are available at market rates.

In passing this act we believed that Congress intended that at least 50 percent of such traffic should be transported on United States vessels at market rates for United States vessels. The sponsors of this provision in both the Senate and House have stated that such was their understanding, and we believe that this was the understanding of a very large majority of the Members of Congress when they voted its approval. Last autumn the ECA Administrator announced that, based upon the opinion of the general counsel of the ECA, he proposed to interpret this provision so as to limit it with respect to bulk cargoes to instances where United States flag ships are available at world-wide competitive tramp rates.

When Congress enacted the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948, it had before it large amounts of dependable data concerning the higher operating costs of American ships.

The Administrator has expressed the desire that Congress should clarify the provision referred to so that there might be no question as to his administering the act in accordance with the desires of Congress and that he is in no manner exceeding his authority thereunder. There is pending before the Merchant Marine Committee of Congress a bill—H. R. 1340—which in our opinion amply clarifies the congressional intent and will. Hearings have been held on that bill, but it is being considered further by the committee and will require additional time for complete consideration and report.

We believe that the Administrator was also motivated by a desire to administer the act in a more efficient and economical manner, and a very substantial amount of misunderstanding has arisen concerning the financial effect of the higher ocean freight rates paid to American ships. Some differences of interpretation exist, and the committee feels that more careful consideration is required to write into law clarification that will carry out the intent of Congress, and provide that efficient and economical administration that is wished by all concerned with this problem.

We suggest that the right of American shipping to participate in the carriage of these cargoes to the extent of at least 50 percent thereof is the minimum consideration which can be afforded this important industry. To suggest that this industry should perform these services at a rate level comparable with low-wage foreign competition would be a great injustice. We hear no suggestion that the producers of other commodities should be required to adjust similarly their prices. Every other industry supplying commodities or services is receiving their full American price. This includes wheat at the guarantied Government price level, coal, and freight charges to the railroads to bring these commodities to seaboard. Until other industries supplying commodities or services to the ECA program reduce their prices to approximately foreign production cost levels, we see no justification for this discrimination against American shipping.

It is unnecessary to point out the importance of the American merchant marine to transport our commerce to and from our national defenses.

Attention should be called to a statement by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce who recently pointed out the inconsistency of expending appropriately $15,000,000,000 per year upon national defense while at the same time, under the contention of a minor economy, opposing or weakening one of the very important elements of national defense, the American merchant marine.

We submit that the participation of United States ships in the European recovery program is no more an additional subsidy to American shipping than the higher American cost paid to other American industries for commodities or services over and above the price level therefor at a European or world market level based upon the use of cheap labor and low living standards. Unless such a philosophy is adopted as to all other American industries furnishing commodities to the ECA program, we very strongly protest against such discriminatory treatment of United States ships and the creation of a false public impression that an American industry, rather than the Marshall-plan nations is the recipient of substantial portions of the funds appropriated for European recovery.

At the time of a meeting which representatives of the United States Maritime Commission, the United States Senate, our committee of Congress and other interested parties had with the ECA Administrator, he indicated to those present that because of world conditions he would withhold his order for probably another 60 days after February 1, and it is vitally important to act quickly, before another order comes out of ECA.

Senator MAGNUSON said it was thought in the Senate that the provision of the ECA bill was clear but that 50 percent was too little, and that it should have been 75 or 80 percent, but that it was a compromise then.

Correlated with the same problem of clarification involved in H. R. 1340, for which there is pending a similar proposal in the Senate, there is need to extend the time for chartering ships.

It is necessary to increase American ships available to carry the goods, for if no American ships were available foreign rates would increase to a rate about equal to American rates today, if there were no American ships available to compete for part of the business.

Testimony before the committee was to the effect that the American merchant marine could carry more of the cargoes, but it was somewhat agreed that if we could get 50 percent participation we would be content. We said that we would be content if we got 50 percent of all the cargoes financed by Government aid programs in both directions.

The Administrator for ECA announced in a letter to Hon. STYLES BRIDGES, chairman, Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation, that not later than January 1, 1949, he would no longer require that 50 percent of the ECA bulk cargoes be required to be carried in United States flag ships unless such ships are available at competitive rates.

On December 22, 1948, it was announced that the change of policy would be postponed until February 1, 1949, and later it was postponed for an additional 60 days.

In his letter, the Administrator stated that he was advised by the general counsel of the Economic Cooperation Administration that the provision in question—the second sentence of paragraph 2 of section 111 (a)—did not require the Administrator to insist that 50 percent of ECA bulk cargoes should be carried in United States flag ships unless such are available at world-wide competitive tramp rates.

The Maritime Commission reported to the House committee that it was convinced that the action proposed by the Administrator would not be in accord with the provisions of the intent of the law, is not in accord with the economic factors involved in the administration of the 50 percent minimum participation provisions, and will be detrimental to the national commerce and the national security of the United States.

The Maritime Commission reported that the Commission was convinced that the participation in question was a considered decision of policy by the Congress in favor of giving overriding consideration of protecting and promoting the American merchant marine over the making available of dollar credits to the nations participating in the ECA program.

The Commission said:

The legislative history of the provision contains several statements recognizing that enactment of the 50-percent participation provision would involve increased cost of shipment. The subsidy argument was advanced in opposition to the enactment of the provision. Congress obviously intended to adopt the provision notwithstanding that its effect might be an indirect subsidy to American-flag operation. There are other provisions in the act which evidence an intention to minimize as far as possible the effect of the program upon channels of trade forming a part of the domestic economy of the United States.

The Maritime Commission has examined the economic effects of the participation provision and has given careful attention to the probable effects of a suspension or waiver of the provision as proposed by the Administrator for Economic Cooperation. It has explored the extent of the differential between market rates for United States flag vessels and the world-wide competitive tramp rates. It is clear that the differential is smaller and involves much less cost to the taxpayer than has been alleged. The Commission is convinced that the participation provision is a fair and reasonable requirement in connection with the economic cooperation program. It is beyond question that the relatively minor monetary consideration involved is more than outweighed by advantages to the domestic economy and the national security of the United States. In considering the employment of United States flag vessels at market rates for such vessels, it should be obvious that keeping a substantial portion of United States Government-owned vessels employed and maintained in class at the expense of the charterer is preferable to lay-up of such vessels with the attendant expense and loss of employment together with the loss of taxes on the income from such operations and taxes on the earnings of personnel employed in such operation.

With reference to the matter of contribution by the United States shipping industry to the economic rehabilitation of Europe, attention is called to the extent of the United States assistance in rehabilitating the merchant fleets of ECA nations through sales of Government war-built vessels at low prices, enabling foreign nations competing with the United States in shipping to place their fleets in competitive operation rapidly and under conditions of competition which involve continued detriment to the American shipping industry. There is no doubt that if the proposed ECA policy of using foreign-flag vessels to carry bulk cargoes is carried out, it will, in effect, wipe out operation of an American tramp fleet. This proposed policy means the elimination of American ships, seamen, operators, and shore establishments which are essential to a balanced American merchant marine commensurate with the needs of the United States and adequate for its national security. The lesson of two world wars with respect to the shipping industry is a mandate to avoid in the future the extraordinary expense and the dangerous delays of building a merchant marine in time of war or national danger. In a letter from Charles E. Dewey, general agent of the committee of the House and Senate known as the watchdog committee on this ECA program, he says that he believes that the legislative history of the act, Public Law 472, is such as to establish a "clear congressional intent to assure that at least 50 percent of the gross tonnage of commodities procured in the United States be transported abroad on United States flag vessels."

He said:

While the cost of operating United States flag vessels is generally recognized as higher than that of foreign-flag vessels, the adoption of a market rate determined by the world rate would preclude the attainment of objectives sought to be accomplished by the provision. It must be assumed that in providing this protection for United States flag vessels the Congress was aware of this price differential between United States and nonflag vessels.

It would appear from conversations that in determining the proceedings essential in achieving a workable solution to section 111 (a) (2) the following points require careful attention:

1. At present large numbers of United States maritime chartered vessels are being returned to the Commission for the lack of cargo and the nonprofit rate offered. The rate at which these vessels are being returned indicates that the cargo supply may soon reach a point where the present available United States flag ships will not be in such force as to provide capacity for 50-percent total gross tonnage envisioned by the act.

2. There are not sufficient United States flag privately owned vessels to move 50 percent of the gross tonnage, therefore requiring continued bare-boat charters by the Maritime Commission.

3. National security depends to a degree upon an available maritime industry. Therefore, one of the objectives of section 111 (a) (2) was to provide by this provision maximum employment in this industry. This accomplishment necessarily requires the operation of a maximum practicable number of United States flag ships.

4. It is evident, in view of the world supply of cargo space that as the United States cargo space is diminished, the rate for foreign cargo space will be increased, with the end result that the total transportation cost of this program may increase to an amount in excess of the amount that would be necessary even though the 50 percent tonnage shipped on United States vessels were provided at a rate higher than that prevailing for foreign-flag vessels.

I am sure you will find the facilities of the Maritime Commission available to you to the fullest extent in resolving these problems so that the protection intended for the United States flag vessels may be provided and at the same time rates established so as to protect to the greatest extent possible the expenditures of American dollars.

The necessity for the enactment of House Joint Resolution 92 at once is evident because the Chairman of the Maritime Commission testified that there are not at the present time enough privately owned ships to carry 50 percent of the cargoes required to be carried, and as Admiral Smith said:

With our authority expiring on the 28th of February 1949, operators are reluctant to charter from the Commission more ships because they have to pay the cost of taking the ship out of lay-up. Ships must be preserved and they are preserved, and the cost of taking them out of lay-up is considerable, and they would have only one voyage and they cannot get their money back. It is very important that it be determined whether or not our chartering authority is going to be extended beyond February 28 of this year.

In answer to a question by Mr. BOYKIN, Admiral Smith, Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, said that we do have enough vessels to charter to have the entire 100 percent of ECA shipments. He said in answer to a question that if we carried 100 percent, each country would carry 100 percent of its cargoes, and each nation would have its ships going one way in full load and going back in ballast, including ourselves and with a 50 percent rate they will get cargo both ways.

This extension for 4 months of the powers of the Maritime Commission is for the purpose of permitting the committee to examine closely the many and varied problems involved in the extension of the ship sales, charter, and operating authority. In view of the fact that the expiration date of the presently existing authority is February 28, 1949, the committee felt that it did not have sufficient time to permit the necessary consideration of the many questions involved. It is our thought that during this 4-month period the Maritime Commission shall carry on its activities for the sale, charter, and operation of vessels in the same manner as they have been doing and that no changes in policies which might affect sale and charter shall be instituted until the Congress has reached a final decision on the long-range program. In other words, we feel that the status quo should be maintained without the imposition of any restrictions over those which have been in effect for the past several years. Nothing should be done which would adversely affect the power of the Congress to make decisions on the basic questions of sale and charter policy. We have discussed this matter with Admiral Smith, chairman of the Maritime Commission, and have been assured that it is the intent of that body not to impose such restrictions during the period in which this resolution would be in effect, and that changes in chartering policy which had been proposed by his agency will be held in abeyance. Our thought is that during this 4-month period no action should be taken by the Commission which might do irreparable harm to the small operators presently chartering ships. It is our distinct understanding and agreement that the present practices will continue as at present and that no new practices, policies, and regulations shall be put in effect.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. TOLLEFSON], may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the committee report on House Joint Resolution 92, I should like to add a few comments with particular reference to conditions on the west coast.

The Maritime Commission's suggested program of September 22 and 24, 1948, and certain exceptions already made by the Commission in the administration thereof adequately provide for many companies on the west coast, but they do not make adequate provision for many small companies which are prominently identified with the Pacific coastwise trade. I have particular reference to Coastwise Line, Olympic Steamship Co., W. R. Chamberlin Co., James Griffith Co., and others. The reasons why these companies, whose prewar operation was so important to the economy of the west coast as well as to the merchant marine, have failed to purchase tonnage under the Merchant Ship Sales Act, are shown in the record of the hearings. They are based on the fact that under the existing competitive rail-rate structure, it would be impossible for these companies to operate profitably. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been looking into this problem for some time, and hearings on the subject are about to commence. It is to be hoped that within the near future the situation will be adjusted to permit these companies to return to their prewar status as important vessel owners and operators on the west coast.

It would be most unfortunate if the Merchant Marine Committee or the Maritime Commision should impose a death sentence on these companies prior to such time as they could reasonably be expected to purchase vessels and rehabilitate the coastwise trade. In the meantime the companies must be permitted to operate in the offshore trades in order that they may maintain their valuable experience and efficient organizations intact, pending rehabilitation of the coastwise trade. The 4-month extension provided for by House Joint Resolution 92 will give the Merchant Marine Committee a further opportunity to consider the problems of these carriers. I hope that the Maritime Commission will also give the matter further consideration, and suggest to the committee ways and means by which the peculiar needs and requirements of these carriers are to be recognized in the Commission's administrative policy. Meantime we understand the status quo will be maintained, and these companies will continue to operate to the extent of their present scope, pending final action by the committee.

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. LYLE, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 110, Rept. No. 145), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2101) to authorize the regional Agricultural Credit Corporation of Washington, D. C., to make certain disaster or emergency loans and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement he made in connection with the introduction of H. R. 2811 today.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] may have until midnight tonight to file a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KIRWAN (at the request of Mr. MANSFIELD) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Hon. James A. Farley.

Mr. RHODES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include articles on national health insurance and the Taft-Hartley Act.

Mr. BROOKS (at the request of Mr. TRIMBLE) was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made earlier today and include extraneous matter.

Mr. DONOHUE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper clipping.

Mr. MADDEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. McGREGOR asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address he made before the American Road Builders Association.

Mr. KEATING (at the request of Mr. HAND) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FORD asked and was given permission to extend in the RECORD the joint remarks of Mr. ENGEL of Michigan, Mr. POTTER, and himself, and include a letter and a table.

Mr. WELCH of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial published in the San Francisco News.

Mr. GWINN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on rent control.

Mr. PATTERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article on Dr. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., vice president of Georgetown University.

Mr. HAGEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from a Minneapolis newspaper.

PERSONAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, I was called off the floor during the roll call a few moments ago on the passage of the bill H. R. 1661. I should like the RECORD to show that had I been present I would have voted "yea."

SIGNING OF ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House today the Speaker may be authorized to sign any enrolled bills or joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and found truly enrolled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute for the purpose of announcing the program for next week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it was the intention to bring up today House Resolution 75, but this will be brought up on Monday next. It will not appear on the program for next week, but since I have been informed that there is some opposition to it, rather than bring it up tonight I am putting it on the program for Monday.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is House Resolution 75 the resolution that deals with investigative powers for the Committee on Education and Labor?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is correct.

This is the program for next week:

On Monday there will be the call of the Consent Calendar. There will also be a suspension on the bill H. R. 2626, if the bill is not passed by unanimous consent. That is the authorization of the General Accounting Office Building. There will also be taken up the bill H. R. 858, known as the overtime on overtime bill, and the bill H. R. 2102, which authorizes the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation to make disaster loans.

Tuesday is Washington's Birthday. There will be no session on Wednesday. We will adjourn from Tuesday to Thursday, and there is no business scheduled for Thursday. There will be no business brought up after Monday of next week, with the exception of that which is brought up by unanimous consent. We know such matters, and there probably will be none, are very carefully screened by both sides before unanimous consent can be obtained.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The majority leader mentioned the bill relating to overtime on overtime and also the bill relating to the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation. Are those coming up under suspension of the rules?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; they will come up under the regular rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 20 minutes.

GOVERNMENT FINANCES GO INTO THE RED WITH TRUMAN—WE SCATTER OUR TAXPAYERS' DOLLARS ALL OVER THE WORLD

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, on many occasions I have risen in this Chamber to plead with the Members of this House to cut down on the huge appropriations, so that we can balance the budget, bring our financial house in order, and commence to pay off the huge national debt accumulated under the New Deal and the recent World War.

At the close of 1932 the national debt was approximately $19,500,000,000, and a great portion of this debt was incurred by loans to foreign governments during and after World War I, which for the most part never have been paid.

On Thursday, February 10, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS] warned the Members that the President's budget request for 1950 exceeds the budget submitted for 1948 by $4,400,000,000 and is $6,800,000,000 larger than the budget for 1947.

Well can I remember, Mr. Speaker, how the people of this Nation reacted to the spendings of the Fifty-second Congress. This was our first billion-dollar Congress. The older Members of this body will perhaps recall the depression, the unemployment and the labor disorders of 1893 and 1894. The country was in a turmoil.

Yet the Fifty-second Congress voted appropriations totaling $507,376,397 during the first session and $519,535,293 during the second session, a total of more than a billion dollars in the 2-year period.

Every succeeding Congress, except the Fifty-third has voted bigger and bigger appropriations which have helped to build up our national debt.

Back in 1893 and 1894 the debt was less than one billion dollars. It averaged about $15 per capita. It did not vary very much even during the period of the Spanish-American War, when it rose to $19.33 per capita. However, by 1916 the debt had ben reduced to $11.96 per capita.

Today with the debt standing at more than $250,000,000,000 it is approximately $1,738 per capita. So I say the Members of this Congress ought to stop, look, and listen, long and carefully, before they vote the full $41,857,777,869 our President has asked for. Now I do not impugn the motives of our President, who has to take his advice from many sources, but I do wish to point out that we have got to cut down on the spending if this Nation is to remain solvent. We cannot continue to scatter our taxpayers' dollars all over the world indefinitely. We have plenty of places for every dollar right here in the United States. And surely no honorable course will lead to foisting our present national debt upon the shoulders and the backs of generations as yet unborn. Now, some will ask how can we cut down on the spending and keep this Nation out of another war.

THE FIRST STEP TO ECONOMY

The first and the prime step, in my opinion, will be the putting into immediate operation the recommendations of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, created by the Eightieth Congress.

If we can lift, in part only, the load of Federal bureaucrats who have affixed themselves to the Government pay rolls, from the backs of the American taxpayer we will not only move toward economy in Government, but at the same time go a long way toward saving our Republic from the advance of State socialism.

Just think, as recently as 1941 we had 1,292,000 employees on the civilian pay rolls. Last year the number was 2,021,000 and growing rapidly.

As our Federal bureaucracy grew, so did Federal control over taxing. There has been a great change in the tax pattern since 1932. Where the Federal Government used to collect about one-fourth of all taxes in 1932, today the Federal Government collects three-fourths.

The pattern is shown by the table which follows:

TABLE 1.—Percent of taxes collected by Federal, State and local taxing authorities

|---|---|
| 1932: | |
| Federal, percent | 24.0 |
| State, percent | 22.6 |
| Cities, percent | 24.7 |
| Others, percent | 28.7 |
| Total | 100.0 |
| 1947: | |
| Federal percent | 74.7 |
| State, percent | 13.6 |
| Cities, percent | 5.7 |
| Others, percent | 6.0 |
| Total | 100.0 |

Dollar-wise the collections compare as follows:

|---|---|
| 1932: | |
| Federal taxes | $1,790,000,000 |
| State taxes | 1,890,000,000 |
| All other taxes | 4,468,000,000 |
| Total | 8,148,000,000 |
| 1947: | |
| Federal taxes | 35,117,000,000 |
| State taxes | 5,776,000,000 |
| All other taxes | 5,795,000,000 |
| Total | 45,688,000,000 |

In 1948 the Federal Government collected $42,431,000,000 in taxes; the State governments, $7,798,000,000; and the local taxing authorities collected $7,122,000,000. This total taken by the tax collector of $57,351,000,000 is more than one-fourth of the national income at its peak point in 1948.

The Federal Government is siphoning off the peoples earnings by the billions for purposes and enterprises that were never dreamed of in the days of Jefferson and Jackson, the great leaders of the party now in power.

Jefferson foresaw some of the difficulties which confront us now. In a letter to M. Pictet, written during his first term, he said:

> We are endeavoring to reduce the Government to the practice of a rigorous economy, to avoid burthening the people, and arming the magistrate with a patronage of money which might be used to corrupt and undermine the principles of our Government.

In a letter written May 14, 1801, to Mr. Macon, Jefferson outlined his program for economy as follows:

> Levees are done away.
> The first communication to the next Congress will be, like subsequent ones, by message, to which no answer will be expected.
> The diplomatic establishment in Europe will be reduced to three Ministers.
> The compensation to collectors depends on you (Congress) and not on me.
> The Army is undergoing a chaste reformation.
> The Navy will be reduced to the legal establishment by the last of this month.
> Agencies in every department will be revised.
> We shall push you to the utmost in economy.
> A very early recommendation had been given to the Postmaster General to employ no printer, foreigner, or revolutionary Tory in any of his offices. This Department is still untouched.
> The arrival of Mr. Gallatin yesterday, completed the organization of our administration.

Jefferson also said:

> I place economy among the first and most important of republican virtues, and public debt as the greatest of the dangers to be feared.

Members of the Congress, let us heed the wise advice of Jefferson and start economizing before it is too late.

We ought to be able to make a good start on our international-relief programs. The bipartisan foreign policies which we adopted during the late war have now drifted into bipartisan worldwide relief policies.

Our present policies, if long continued, will bring disaster to any political party and to the Nation.

We should realize now that we can never buy peace with American dollars. We tried that approach to world problems before. Our best defense against war with any nation is a strong and solvent America where the citizen supports the Government and does not look to Government for his substance.

During the period we were at war with Germany, Italy, and Japan, our Government made loans, grants, and other relief payments to foreign governments, many who were not in the war, in the amount of over $48,600,000,000. That was before July 1, 1945.

Since July 1945, we have authorized additional loans, grants, and credits to implement our international policies as follows:

|---|---|
| United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation | $2,700,000,000 |
| United Nations Organization | 41,426,162 |
| Lend-lease (postwar) | 2,163,000,000 |
| International Monetary Fund (authorization) | 2,750,000,000 |
| International Bank | 635,000,000 |
| Export-Import Bank (loans authorized) | 2,258,300,000 |
| Loans to Great Britain and Philippines | 4,390,000,000 |
| War Department, grants for relief | 1,771,926,293 |
| Surplus property sales (credits extended) | 1,148,000,000 |
| Greek-Turkish loan (authorized amount) | 400,000,000 |
| Relief in occupied areas (Army) | 2,230,000,000 |
| International Relief Organization | 71,073,000 |
| International Refugee Organization | 182,327,468 |
| European Cooperative Administration | 4,754,000,000 |
| Other appropriations for foreign or international objectives by Eightieth Congress | 300,000,000 |
| Total | 25,495,052,923 |

Although we have obligated our taxpayers to the extent of more than $25,000,000,000 since July 1, 1945, the President now asks for $6,709,000,000 for international affairs in the fiscal year 1950. This request taken alone means an additional tax burden of $46 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. Money that for the most part will be gone with the wind, insofar as any good it will ever do the average taxpaying family. To many families $46 is still a sizable sum of money, even in these days of high prices, and high wages. Forty-six dollars to the average family means shoes for the kiddies, and lots of little things that will have to be done without if we go through with this program as the one-worlders want us to.

The big brain trust that helps operate our Government here in Washington has solutions for all the ills of the world and all its peoples.

I sometimes wonder what will happen when we run out of money, and cannot take care of our own people by providing them with honest employment in all the lines of human endeavor. Who will then come to our rescue? Who will make us loans and grants, and supply our people with food, clothing, and shelter? I wonder.

When that day comes, the planners will take over and have the Government provide us with every social need from womb to tomb. The Government will operate the farms and the factories, give everyone free medical and dental care, old-age pensions, and what not. This is the bait that has been held out to people in other countries for hundreds of years, and it has never worked and never will.

But to get back to the President's request for $6,709,000,000 for international affairs and finance for 1950.

BULK OF MONEY GOES TO ECA

The bulk of the request, that is $4,500,000,000, is scheduled for the Economic Cooperative Administration. Mr. Paul Hoffman, the Administrator, is honest enough to admit that even this huge sum may not be enough for 1950, and he said he might have to come back for more.

Last year after we appropriated funds for the ECA program, the recipient governments got together and signed agreements with our country and each other agreeing to stabilize their currencies and balance their budgets. They have not done so, and we ought to find out why. Britain alone had a budget deficit last year of over $800,000,000. But still her socialization plans go merrily on, and this country and her dominions will have to continue to contribute. Stabilized currencies in Europe are far from being a fact. There are black markets of all kinds, and I am convinced that these black-market deals will persist as long as American dollars flow to Europe.

THE TRADE FACTOR

Some of our businessmen argue that we have to help Europe get on her feet if we ever expect to do business there. Now I want Europe to get on her feet as bad as anyone. However, as one businessman, I want our trade with Europe to be down a two-way street in which European dollars are used for European purchases and American dollars for American purchases. As it is now nearly all of our foreign trade is subsidized with our taxpayers' dollars.

Some claim that ECA is stopping the advance of communism in the European countries outside the iron curtain. But is it stopping the advent of socialism? After all both the Socialists and the Communists believe in the philosophies of Marx and Engels. The only difference seemingly is the approach to the dictatorial state as we know it.

The one-worlders and the free-traders who have been boosting for bigger appropriations for ECA sometimes have something more than sentiment to sell.

For example: A study of the cotton shipments authorized by ECA for the month of August 1948 revealed that the firm of Anderson, Clayton & Co., Houston, Tex., received 71.2 percent of the total cotton authorizations for that month, while 65 other cotton firms received the remainder of the authorizations. Mr. William L. Clayton, chairman of the board of directors of Anderson, Clayton & Co., and a former Under Secretary of State, appeared on January 25, 1949, before the Ways and Means Committee, as an endorser of the then pending reciprocal trade bill, H. R. 1211. Mr. Clayton at that time stated that under the law as passed by the Eightieth Congress "no worth-while trade agreements would be negotiated" and he added "I still feel that that statement was correct." So Mr. Clayton wants reciprocal trade. Remember his firm got 71.2 percent of the cotton business under ECA in August. A measly 147,639 bales.

TOBACCO AUTHORIZATIONS FOR ECA

To December 31, 1948, European Cooperative Administration approved purchase of tobacco in the amount of $106,400,000. The bulk of the tobacco going to the United Kingdom, Ireland, Bizonia, Denmark and Norway. Forty-nine percent of all the tobacco authorizations were for the United Kingdom, where cigarettes sell for 70 cents a pack. Made principally of American tobacco, supplied by American dollars, the British Labor government ought to be cleaning up in the tobacco business. But are they? Their budgets do not show it. Here in the United States if it were not for the tax a 10-cent pack of cigarettes would be on the market right now. That is the difference between free enterprise and a regimented economy. In a study of the tobacco authorizations for the 6-week period from August 1, 1948, through September 15, 1948, it was found that 34 firms received authorizations for shipments totaling $13,075,101. Imperial Tobacco Co., a British-owned corporation received nearly 81 percent of the business, practically a monopoly, I would say.

COAL

During the summer of 1948, coal was being shipped by the producers and brokers in this country in huge quantities. In fact in one 6-week period 248 cargoes, averaging more than 9,000 tons each left American ports for European destinations. Here again 4 huge corporations supplied 57 percent of the business, while 26 other firms supplied the remaining tonnages.

ALUMINUM

At the very time last fall, when the shortage of aluminum in this country was most severely felt, ECA authorized purchases from the Aluminum Union Limited, Montreal, Canada, of aluminum ingots in huge quantities for the Ministry of Supply, England. From September 16 to 30, 1948, the authorization amounted to more than 72,000,000 pounds, or about 36,000 tons.

At that very time, aluminum was backing up in England, in France, and in Italy, and so-called scrap in sizable quantities was being shipped to the United States where it was grabbed up by hungry purchasers for as high a price as 32 cents per pound. The aluminum which was sold to the British Ministry of Supply cost but 11½ cents per pound on the average. But, remember, our taxpayers paid the freight. There used to be a saying that "Competition is the life of trade." But there can never be any competition in a deal where our taxpayers furnish the funds to buy commodities like aluminum to be shipped to Europe, and where the Europeans can take their gift aluminum for their own uses, and ship their scrap aluminum back to the United States, and sell it in the gray markets for a fancy price. Only the shortages here at home, and the failure of our producers to anticipate the market demand during the past year could have made the aluminum deals possible.

OTHER NONFERROUS METALS

Besides the aluminum shipments financed by our taxpayers, we have been shipping large quantities of brass, copper, lead, and zinc, all for free. These are items which we are supposed to be stocking for strategic purposes. But it seems that strategic purposes and national defense have been temporarily sidetracked so that ECA can help Europe to her feet again.

BRINGING HOME THE BACON

Every now and then the Economic Cooperation Administration issues a report called the commodity supplier data. For October 1–15 this report shows that the British Ministry of Food received authorizations for shipments of more than 120,000,000 pounds of bacon from Canadian packing firms. This is what I call bringing home the bacon, the bacon paid for by the toil and sweat of American labor. Bringing home the bacon for John Bull.

Now I have not much confidence in any figures released by ECA. I think they are all rigged up, and I expect some of Mr. Hoffman's assistants will be quick in explaining that these figures were in error.

However it may be, we will be in error if we do not start watching these appropriations and cutting them down sharply. It is a certainty that 145,000,000 Americans cannot go on indefinitely attempting to feed and clothe people in other parts of this world that cannot do these things for themselves.

Let us start now and pledge ourselves to economy in spending both at home and abroad.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 25 minutes.

RELIEF FROM HEAVY EXCISE TAXES

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill to provide some relief from the heavy excise tax burdens imposed during the war. In my speech of last year, in regard to the income tax, I pointed out that rates of tax in themselves do not bring in revenue to the Government. Too high rates may actually decrease the revenue. The soundness of this position was amply demonstrated by the increased revenues from income taxes in the calendar year 1948 after the adoption of the Income Tax Reduction Act of 1948. This position is equally true in the case of excise taxes. Now that we are entering a stage where we have a buyer's market instead of a seller's market, and competition becomes keener between businessmen, it is very important that the tax laws do not hamper or obstruct the production and sale of goods and commodities which are essential to the well-being and comfort of our people.

There are on the statute books today a great many types of selective excise taxes. Some are the backbone of our internal revenue system; for example, the taxes on liquor and tobacco. Others are of a temporary nature which were either imposed during the war period or had wartime rates added to the peacetime rates. It is indisputable that some of these new taxes and increased rates were purposely adopted during the war to discourage civilian production from competing with the war program.

I recall very clearly the testimony of Leon Henderson, Administrator of the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply, before our committee in 1941. In speaking of excise taxes, he said, and I quote:

> Turning first to the proposals for excise taxes, the only case which may be made out for such additional taxation at the present time from a total defense point of view must rest upon its effectiveness in discouraging civilian production which competes with the defense program for men, materials, and machines.

We are now in the fourth year following the end of the war and our efforts, if we desire to make our economy strong and efficient, should be directed toward encouraging civilian production and not discouraging it.

My bill is only a step toward relief from the war excise taxes. It is estimated that the bill will result in a loss in revenue of approximately $440,000,000 for the year 1950. I wish it could provide for greater relief. However, larger reductions, in my opinion, will have to await the action of the Congress in reducing the enormous budget proposed by the President for the fiscal year 1950, which, when figured on the same basis as other budgets, is approximately $44,000,000,000. This is the greatest peacetime budget in the history of our country. If we are ever to get our taxes down to a fair and reasonable level, we must reduce the cost of Government and not continue to increase it. As budget expenditures for fiscal 1950 are estimated at approximately $44,000,000,000, a reduction in expenditures of only 1 percent will take care of the loss in revenue under my bill, and relieve taxpayers of these war burdens.

In the last Congress, the Republcans, with the help of statesmanlike Democrats, succeeded in making important reductions in the budget for the fiscal year 1949.

Former President Hoover has recently made a study of Government reorganization which, if adopted, will result in reducing expenditures by $3,000,000,000. Reductions such as these are essential for tax relief. What the country needs is not tax increase but tax reduction. I hope the budget for the fiscal year 1950 is substantially reduced so that we can provide further tax relief to the country.

I will now discuss the reductions under my bill in accordance with its arrangement.

The first section, dealing with tax reduction, relates to luggage. Under the existing law, the luggage tax includes ladies' handbags, pocketbooks, billfolds, and key cases. These items fall more in the class of necessities rather than luxuries, and impose an undue burden on the ladies. My bill eliminates the tax on these articles.

With respect to the remaining articles, the retail tax on luggage is reduced from 20 to 15 percent.

Our committee has had quite a bit of complaint about the retail tax on jewelry. There are certain articles which have been construed by the Treasury as coming under the definition of jewelry which are really necessities. I refer to fountain pen gold points and rhinestone buttons permanently attached to articles of wearing apparel. The bill removes such articles from the jewelry tax. It also reduces the rate of tax on jewelry from 20 to 15 percent of the retail sales price.

Another retail tax which is bearing heavily on our economy is the tax on furs. Testimony before our committee has shown that this tax has had a disastrous effect on the fur market. My bill reduces the rate of tax on furs from 20 to 15 percent on the retail price.

Another tax which has been particularly burdensome upon the ladies is the tax on toilet preparations and cosmetics. Testimony before our committee indicated that baby oils, baby lotions, and baby powders have been classed as toilet preparations by the Treasury. My bill completely exempts these items from tax. It also reduces the retail tax on other toilet articles from 20 to 15 percent. We also had considerable complaint about taxing toilet articles sold to barber shops or beauty parlors for use in the operation thereof. A bill passed the House last year exempting from the tax such articles when sold to barber shops or beauty parlors for their own use. This bill was not considered by the Senate. Under my bill, the same exemption is provided.

Under the existing law, the tax on tires has been construed to apply to tires used on children's toys, ordinary lawn mowers and bicycles. I do not believe that the Congress ever desired to collect a tax on articles of this type. My bill remedies this situation by exempting from the tax on tires, tires manufactured, produced or imported to retail at not more than $5 each.

Many witnesses appeared before our committee and protested against the automobile tax applying to house trailers. It was pointed out that to tax such trailers adds to the present housing shortage, discriminates against one type of housing as compared with another, and places a severe hardship on veterans, who purchase for housing a large number of trailer coaches. My bill corrects this inequity by exempting trailer coaches from the automobile tax.

In connection with the tax on automotive parts and accessories, the Treasury rulings have been very conflicting with respect to the taxation of rebuilt, reconditioned, and repaired parts or accessories. These rebuilt, reconditioned, or repaired parts should not be subjected to the tax which is intended to apply only to new parts. The bill corrects this inequity by exempting from the tax on automotive parts or accessories, rebuilt, reconditioned, or repaired parts.

Another wartime tax which has been particularly harmful with respect to schools, churches, and juvenile clubs is the tax on musical instruments. The revenue from this source is not large and musical instruments are used in many cases for educational, religious, and character-building purposes. My bill repeals the tax on musical instruments.

Our committee had brought to our attention an inequity existing in the case of the tax applying to electrical appliances. Under existing law, if a farmer buys a direct motor-driven fan for use in a barn or poultry house or for the ventilation of potato storage, apple storage, or other types of storage, he is required to pay the 10-percent tax applicable to electrical appliances. On the other hand, if he buys a belt-driven fan for the same purposes, no excise tax is applicable. Electric direct motor-driven fans are not luxury items but are used in industry, on the farm, and in commercial establishments for the protection, health, and comfort of workers. My bill corrects this inequity by amending the law to confine the tax to electric direct motor-driven fans of the ceiling, wall-bracket, desk, pedestal, and air-circulator types.

Testimony before our committee disclosed the heavy tax burden on photographic apparatus which is now 25 percent. My bill reduces the tax on cameras and lenses, photographic apparatus, and equipment and any apparatus designed for use in the taking of photographs or motion pictures or in developing, printing, or enlarging photographs or motion pictures from 25 percent to 10 percent. The tax on photographic plates and sensitized paper is reduced from 15 percent to 10 percent. These taxes are typical of those adopted during the war to discourage civilian production.

The war tax on electric light bulbs is extremely burdensome. It is now 20 percent of the manufacturers' price. My bill reduces the rate to 10 percent. Electric light bulbs are a necessity and are used in practically every American home.

The present law imposes a tax of 6 cents per gallon on lubricating oils. Lubricating oil has been construed by the Treasury and the courts to apply to cutting oils, a much cheaper grade of oil than motor oils and which is not used primarily as a lubricant but to carry away chips and cuttings, and to cool cutting machine tools. My bill removes from the tax on lubricating oils, oils designed primarily for use in cutting and machining operations on metals and known commercially as cutting oils.

During the war the exemption from the admissions tax to religious, educational, or charitable entertainments, county fairs and concerts conducted by civilian or community membership associations was removed. The admissions tax from these sources results in very little revenue and is a constant source of irritation to those worth-while and deserving groups. My bill restores the exemptions existing before the war to these groups.

The tax on telephone, telegraph, and radio facilities have been greatly increased during the war period and such high rates are having a very deterrent effect on this type of business. My bill reduces the war rate from 25 to 20 percent for telephone toll and domestic telegraph, cable, and radio messages. It also reduces the rate on wire and equipment service from 8 to 5 percent.

One of the most troublesome taxes imposed during the war is that relating to the transportation of persons. I regret, because of the large revenue yield from this tax, that I am unable to recommend at this time its complete elimination. The tax interferes with travel by rail or bus which are now in competition with automobile travel. My bill reduces the rate of tax from 15 to 10 percent. This should eliminate, to some extent, the poor man's cost of travel and lessen the expenses of the businessman who is compelled to travel.

Another tax which was imposed during the war and which unjustly discriminates against the farmer and the businessman is the tax on the transportation of property. This tax is at the rate of 3 percent upon the price paid for the transportation of the property except in the case of the transportation of coal where the rate is 4 cents per short ton. This is another tax which I would like to see immediately repealed because it is a distinct burden on the farmer, the businessman, and the shipper. However, since the tax yields a very large amount of revenue, it is only possible at this time to reduce the rate. My bill will cut the rate from 3 percent to 1½ percent and in the case of coal, from 4 cents per short ton to 2 cents per short ton.

The relief provided in my bill is made effective on the first day following its enactment. I regard this as important. If the effective date of the bill was postponed until later, buyers might delay seasonable purchases until after the date the tax reduction becomes effective.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

WHY I AM OPPOSED TO THE TAFT-HARTLEY ACT

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of repeal of the Taft-Hartley law. I want to explain in some detail why I am in favor of the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law. I believe this law should be repealed because it is bad for labor, bad for industry, and bad for the general public.

The Taft-Hartley Act has been presented to us, most cleverly, as a safe middle-of-the-road approach to labor problems. It is represented as a compromise between the so-called management excesses of the days before Roosevelt and the so-called labor excesses of the Wagner Act.

It is my conviction that this is not a true picture of the act. It is not a middle-of-the-road bill at all; it undermines the fundamental principles of collective bargaining established by the Wagner Act and returns us to the period of potential management dictatorship which existed prior to 1934. And we can all remember that during that period management, unrestrained by vigorous unions, led us straight into the depression of the early thirties. That period, we will all agree, was bad for labor, bad for management, and bad for the general public.

The labor laws of the 1930's, beginning with the Norris-LaGuardia Act under President Hoover, were designed to permit organized labor and industry to exercise their natural powers under our social system. They forbade industry to use certain unfair powers which prevented the unions from carrying out their legitimate role in our economy. Some of such illegitimate practices of industry in the field of labor relations were dismissal for union affiliation, yellow-dog contracts, use of professional strike breakers, the company spy and agent provocateur, labor injunctions, use of company gunmen, black list of union members, use of State and Federal troops to break strikes, and other such measures.

Of course, Taft-Hartley proponents say that they would never dream of returning to such nefarious practices. If they did not intend to use these provisions of the act, we may be assured they would never have included them. If you legalize roulette, it need not surprise you to find that somebody wants to operate a wheel.

Some people who were skeptical about the Taft-Hartley Act in the beginning have been lulled into acceptance because they feel that no spectacular harm has been done to labor in the past 2 years. This is true in the main, though there have been a few outstanding examples of hardship, such as the Chicago printers, whose long strike has cost over 11 million dollars. And little organizing has been undertaken for fear of the complications of the law.

One of my constituents has written me a series of specific questions about the Taft-Hartley Act based on the experience of the few months of its existence. He asks what specific harm the law has done to labor, to industry, and to the general public, and what specific good it has done to the same three groups.

I can give my friend answers to these questions, but they will not be answers to the main question, Why do I believe the Taft-Hartley law must be repealed? For the real objection to the act lies, not in what it has done so far, but in what it has the power to do in the future, when it will pay management to invoke its destructive clauses. While there is a shortage of labor, particularly of skilled labor, management will not risk antagonizing it by making full use of the powers given by the act. But when management is more anxious to get rid of workers than to keep them, the picture will be entirely different.

The Taft-Hartley Act is based on the labor views of the National Association of Manufacturers. One might almost say it is legislation of the NAM, by the NAM, for the NAM. Its principal proponents have always known this, and given it support on that basis. They agree heartily with the NAM philosophy that the only good union is a dead union.

Loud protests are made that the act does not seek to weaken or destroy unions or restrict their "legitimate objectives." In fact, a great deal is said about how much the proponents of the act love the unions; all they ask is to correct a few little injustices to employers.

But let us remember that when the NAM says it is in favor of unions, it means just what Stalin means when he says he is in favor of democracy. The unions favored by the NAM are without power, without national connections, without influence, without funds and without freedom. Unions of this type, we are assured, will be protected under the act. But this is not what the American people mean when they speak of unions.

One of the most effective opponents of communism in American unions is James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO. Jim Carey declared at a recent hearing on the new labor bill that unions of workers in Russia are today being operated under a Communist version of the Taft-Hartley law.

My opposition to the Taft-Hartley Act is based on the conviction that the only good union is a live union, one with power to bargain collectively for its members, to win better conditions through that bargaining, and to see that the employers live up to the conditions agreed upon. Anything less than this is a company-dominated union and not a free association of workers.

Supporters of the Taft-Hartley Act insist that the law during its less than 2 years of operation has by no means wrecked the union movement; that there have been strikes and organizing campaigns and every other manifestation of life and liberty. But the act so far has not been tested by depression conditions. Today labor is in demand and it has not paid industry to crack down on the unions and incur labor's ill-will. But when the demand for labor slacks off, then those who supported the act will use its provisions as a weapon to crush the unions and force their destruction.

This view is not merely that of labor. The conservative and authoritative industry publication, Business Week, made this statement in an editorial a few weeks ago. The editorial said the Taft-Hartley Act must go because it destroyed the equality between labor and management which it considered of major importance. It admitted in its very frank editorial, that in time of depression the Taft-Hartley Act could and would be used to destroy labor.

Let me read you what Business Week, probably the foremost business publication in the country, had to say. The editorial is entitled "Why the Taft-Hartley Act Failed." It appeared in the issue for December 18. This is what this realistic employer organ says:

> Most businessmen are realistic. Few are wasting time deploring the imminent doom of the Taft-Hartley Act. To be sure they worry about the statute which will replace it. But most businessmen are getting ready to work with a new set of labor-relations rules.
> A change of rules will bring a host of practical problems. Before that happens, there is some point in considering why the Taft-Hartley Act failed, and what may be the lesson of that experience.
> For the Taft-Hartley Act did fail—on one of the most important grounds by which a law must be judged in a democratic society. That ground is consent. Only the police state can enforce a law which is believed to be unjust by the people it affects.
> What was wrong was that the Taft-Hartley Act went too far. It crossed the narrow line separating a law which aims only to regulate, from one which could destroy.
> Given a few million unemployed in America, given an administration in Washington which was not prounion—and the Taft-Hartley Act conceivably could wreck the labor movement.
> These are the provisions that could do it: (1) picketing can be restrained by injunction; (2) employers can petition for a collective bargaining election; (3) strikers can be held ineligible to vote—while the strike replacements cast the only ballots; and (4) if the outcome of this is a no-union vote, the Government must certify and enforce it.
> Any time there is a surplus labor pool from which an employer can hire at least token strike replacements, these four provisions, linked together, presumably can destroy a union.
> By going that far, the law defeated itself.

I have quoted this statement from Business Week at some length because it comes from a source known to be usually hostile to labor, yet it opposes the act as fundamentally a menace to business and the public as well as to labor.

There are other sources of criticism of the Taft-Hartley Act not from a labor viewpoint. A few days ago I received a copy of a resolution passed by the Common Council of Milwaukee. Since we have nonpartisan election of city officials in Milwaukee, this cannot be construed to be in any sense a labor statement. It reads as follows:

> Whereas in 1935 the Congress of the United States enacted the Wagner Act which gave the workingman the right to organize into free labor unions and to collectively bargain with his employer; and
> Whereas this law based upon the American principal of equality of opportunity was thereafter hailed as the Magna Carta of Labor; and
> Whereas the enactment of the Eightieth Congress of the Taft-Hartley Act because of its inequities and inequalities tended to disturb if not actually destroy the fundamental gains made by workingmen in their quest for economic justice: Now, therefore, be it
> Resolved by the Major and Common Council of the City of Milwaukee, That we call upon the Congress of the United States now in session to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act, and in its place reenact the Wagner Act as originally enacted; and be it further
> Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the two United States Senators representing the State of Wisconsin, and the Congressmen from the Fourth and Fifth Districts, and to the clerks of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Another approach to the issue is found in an excellent book by the Reverend George A. Kelly, called The Taft-Hartley Act, a Moral Analysis. Father Kelly develops a moral and ethical argument against the act as class legislation based upon interest and prejudice. He established the moral right of workers to strike or work in other ways for higher wages and better working conditions, and argues that the Taft-Hartley Act is immoral in opposing those rights. And he makes clear that conscious reflection upon basic moral or ethical principles would have, or should have, prevented the adoption of many of the most objectionable provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Many other religious leaders have arrived independently at Father Kelly's conclusions. A group of 642 prominent religious leaders of Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish faith have united in condemning it. They stated that the Taft-Hartley Act was a measure calculated to destroy the real strength of a free labor movement by undermining basic principles of collective bargaining, making the Government of the United States a ready instrument of employer resistance to legitimate needs of workers, and subjecting unions to a process of decimation and frustration under Government control.

The National Catholic Welfare Conference has attacked the Taft-Hartley Act as disruptive and called for the elimination of its cumbersome and obstructive provisions.

Let us return for a few moments to the dangerous objections to the act raised by Business Week. First, picketing can be restrained by use of the injunction. Picketing, of a kind which does not lead to violence, is a primary right of unions in calling attention of nonstrikers and the public to their strike. The use of the injunction in this and other labor situations is a reversion to the bad old days. In the 1920's the injunction was freely used in labor disputes and used invariably to restrain labor from organizing, picketing, striking, or carrying on other legitimate acts of a trade union. Injunctions were issued right and left by the labor-baiting judges under the thumb of local employers.

The Taft-Hartley Act not merely revives the use of the injunction, but actually requires the Government to secure injunctions on behalf of employers where there are alleged violations of the prohibitions against jurisdictional strikes and boycotts.

There are also vague and dangerous provisions for the use of the injunction to protect the right of individuals not to join the union; it is impossible under this provision that many ordinary organizational activities may be restrained. There is also a loose phrase about not causing the employer to pay money for services which are not performed; this may be used to restrain a union from demanding paid vacations and holidays, shifts in work loads, and other perfectly normal demands.

The provision for the use of the injunction in emergency situations is one which has had a good deal of popular appeal. However, the definition of emergency is so wide and so open to interpretations in local situations, that it may be used in practically any strike. If the weapon of the injunction is to be used in protecting the public against strikes which seriously affect the public welfare, then the workers and the public must have better safeguards against misuse of this weapon than the Taft-Hartley Act gives them.

Point two in the indictment by Business Week is that employers can petition for a collective-bargaining election. This means that employers may choose a time convenient to them, or may supplant union men with strike breakers for the mere purpose of holding an election to declare in favor of a company union. Those of us whose memories in the labor movement go back to pre-Wagner Act days know that this can very easily happen. It opens the door for those vicious appendages of the open-shop system, the labor detective agency, and the phony employment bureau which hires out thugs and strike breakers. Such practices invariably lead to violence, loss of life, limb, and property and demoralization of the community, which we should all deplore.

The third point raised by Business Week is that strikers can be held ineligible to vote, while the strike replacements cast the only ballots. This is a further invitation for the development of employer tactics of a nature to injure the unions and the community. I cannot warn too strongly against the development of a class of professional strike breakers, under the protection of the law, to beat down wages and beat up workers. Such a development, which is sure to come sooner or later should the Taft-Hartley Act be permitted to continue, would put labor relations back 20 to 30 years. It would turn us back from the theory of "talk it out" to the discarded idea of slug it out.

The fourth point is that a no-union vote, won on the votes of strike breakers, or in the neat phrase of Business Week, "token replacements," would be enforced by the Government, thus making the Government a party to a strong-arm agreement dictated by the employers. This, of course, is not collective bargaining at all. It removes all basis of equality between the two parties. It knocks labor out on a foul and then certifies industry as the new heavyweight champion.

In addition to these four points raised by the editorial in Business Week, there are a number of other provisions in the Taft-Hartley Act which are fraught with danger.

Unions are made suable for the acts of their so-called agents, even though the union had not approved or ratified the acts in question. What could be easier than for an employer to hire a labor spy, place him in the union to win a position of trust, then have him set off an explosion in a struck plant. The amount of the damage would easily bankrupt the union, as well as arousing the public against the strikers.

The legal complications, requirements, prohibitions, and general confusion established by the Taft-Hartley Act have earned it the epithet of the lawyers' paradise. It is, in my opinion, a very bad thing to remove labor-management relations from the hands of labor and management and turn them over to the lawyers. The delays and expense of continuous litigation, the removal of grievances from the field of prompt and direct action by the interested parties to an uninformed and uninterested court, can only result in deterioration of relations. And the delay and expense is, of course, far more important to the union than to management. That was undoubtedly in the minds of those who drew up the law.

One of the foremost experts on labor law in the country, Dr. William Leiserson, has said that the one thing above all others that rendered the Taft-Hartley Act unworkable and chaotic was its maze of legal rules over every conceivable happening in labor relations.

The law against secondary boycotts is an effort to break down the solidarity of labor. It was part of a definite theory of former Congressman Hartley and a number of other extremists to "break the unions down to the local level." The phrase is Mr. Hartley's, not mine. The idea of separating unions from each other and from their own industry in various parts of the country is, of course, quite in keeping with their general desire to make the unions too weak to be effective. Divide and conquer is as effective a rule in labor relations as it is in the international field.

I have a good deal of experience with the "runaway" shop in a number of fields, and I know that this phenomenon is a bad thing for labor, for industry, and for the community. If those employers working under satisfactory agreements, paying good wages, and having good working relations are to be protected the union must be free to operate wherever competition arises. Many a town has suffered serious economic loss because open-shop competition started up out of range of union activity and drained off their orders. This condition has been lessening recently, however, as would-be sweat-shop operators become convinced that the union will follow them north, south, east, or west, and force them to keep wages up and hours down. This is for the benefit of industries and communities as well as for the benefit of labor.

Many industries are organized on a Nation-wide basis. It is absurd to consider the possibility of operating the steel industry or the auto industry on a plant-by-plant basis. It is equally absurd to propose to conduct labor negotiations on a single-shop basis. The steel worker today is not to be treated as a blacksmith's helper, free to bargain as an individual with the individual boss. He is part of a vast and complicated human organization, every part of which is related to every other part. Only a strong Nation-wide union can establish his rights.

One of the worst provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act is the one which outlaws agreements mutually satisfactory to workers and employers if such agreements call for the closed shop. Much nonsense has been written and spoken against the closed shop. Actually it is a condition which thousands of employers as well as unions voluntarily wrote into their contracts because it was not only beneficial to them but also to the consuming public.

Closed-shop agreements, voluntarily entered into, helped to make America the greatest industrial nation in the world. During the last war the highest records for production were made by plants operating under such contracts, which are advantageous to the employer as well as to labor. The employer derives the advantages of stability, efficiency, and friendly relations with labor. Where there is a closed shop the workers give their very best because they know that the employer has accepted unionism, wants to live and work in harmony with his employees, and is not scheming to destroy the union at the first opportunity.

Furthermore, it is very difficult to explain to the average union member of long standing why the Government should take such tender care of the nonunion man who is looking for a free ride. The old-time unionist reasons like this: "I joined this union 20 years ago, when pay was low and conditions terrible. I paid my dues all those years, when the dues were a much bigger bite out of the pay check than they are today. I gave up my evenings for meetings and union work, and walked the picket line and went hungry when we were on strike. Now we are doing well, thanks to the work of the union; our pay is good and we have vacations, sick leave, Saturdays off. I helped the union win all these things. Why do I have to share them with some newcomer who is too stingy to spare a few dollars from the good pay I won for him? Why does the Government say it has to protect his right to a free ride on my carfare?" I support the old-timers' contention that he has a right to insist that the newcomers join the union and pay their share of the carfare through closed-shop agreements.

Labor relations, as many a wise employer has discovered, are really human relations. The problem cannot be solved by passing a one-sided punitive law at the behest of the selfish and discredited National Association of Manufacturers. Only by good will, square dealing, and a sincere compliance with a just labor-relations law like the administration's new labor bill can equality in collective bargaining be reestablished and genuine progress be made in the important realm of labor-management relations.

The Taft-Hartley bill must and will be repealed. This is the will of the American people, clearly expressed at the ballot boxes last November 2. I am sure that there are few, if any, Members of this House who could be at ease with their consciences if they failed to carry out such an unmistakable and mighty mandate of the American people.

When we have removed this blot from the statute books, we may rest assured that both the workers and the fair-minded employers of this country will go forward as never before, each recognizing the rights of the other, both dealing with each other as equals, living and working in harmony for their own welfare and for the welfare of the Nation and the world.

Before I conclude, there is just one final point which I should like to impress upon the House. When the Taft-Hartley Act was jammed through the Eightieth Congress and passed over the veto of the President, our friends in Europe—the democratic, freedom-loving peoples of France, Great Britain, and the other countries where human liberty is still prized—were shocked.

The enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act in 1947 gave a tremendous impetus to the Communist propaganda machine. To the peoples of Europe and the whole world, the Kremlin pointed to the Taft-Hartley Act and said, in effect, "Well, if you wanted proof, here is the proof that America is the reactionary country we have been telling you it is—a country that squeezes its workers and throws them into chains."

And then last November, when the news went flashing across the oceans that the people of America had overwhelmingly spoken out for the prompt repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, our democratic friends in western Europe were heartened. They were given new courage to resist the Communists. All this is on the record. It has been fully confirmed in dispatches appearing in the most conservative newspapers of our country. Moreover, it has been fully confirmed by leading American businessmen who have been in Europe and know whereof they speak—such men as Paul Hoffman and Averell Harriman.

There are many, many additional reasons why the removal of the Taft-Hartley Act must receive top priority in the Eighty-first Congress. Within the confines of a single speech it is impossible, of course, to discuss all the dangerous characteristics of this destructive act.

I have indicated some of the major flaws of this vicious law. The facts are known. The Taft-Hartley Act is bad for labor, bad for industry, bad for everyone. We have a mandate from the electorate, and I hope that the Members of this House will act with the utmost promptness to carry out this mandate and put an end to one of the most unfortunate experiments in American history.

A FREE LITHUANIA

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the Lithuanian people throughout America are today commemorating with heartfelt gratitude the fact that the United States has not recognized Russia's usurpation of the Lithuanian people.

Lithuania for centuries has fought for independence and self-government—for civic liberty and religious freedom. This fight will continue in the hearts and minds of all loyal Lithuanians regardless of the present power of a gigantic oppressor nation. Freedom cannot be exterminated permanently from a nation whose peoples have for centuries refused to submit to religious oppression or slavery.

The people of this great country are fighting every hour, through various organizations, underground and otherwise, and they will eventually be rewarded with victory and the reestablishment of freedom within their borders.

Lithuania is a tragic victim of Soviet aggression. The people have been deprived of their property rights, human rights, and fundamental freedoms. Over a half million people of Lithuania have been slain or transferred away from their native country. The crimes committed against these people have been condemned by the United States and other democratic countries which continue to recognize independent Lithuania and its lawful representatives.

It is the honest desire of the Lithuanian people everywhere that our great country and all free democracies of the world continue to stand by the principles of right and justice and that they will continue to fight for the cause of sovereign rights and self-government for the people of Lithuania.

I want to extend my sincere congratulations to the brave Lithuanian people who are engaging in this fight for freedom to restore their independence and throw off the shackles of a ruthless tyrant.

I know that our President, the Congress, and the Department of State, and all the powers behind our great Republic will be marshaled in the future to aid the Lithuanian people in this battle for righteousness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, February 21, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.
